MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

THE tedium of the long lull which supervened on the repulse of Sir Redvers Buller's force at Colenso has been sensibly relieved by some brisk minor operations which have resulted distinctly to our advantage. The first of these was the advance of a detachment from Sir William Gatacre's force to Dordrecht, which was forthwith occupied, a subsequent attack on it by the enemy being repulsed. On Saturday last Captain de Montmorency, V.C., 21st Lancers, with a small body of colonial troops having gone out to reconnoitre the neighbourhood, found the enemy some six miles north of Dordrecht, and detached a party under Lieutenant Milford, of the Frontier Mounted Rifles, to make further observations. This party, consisting of some forty men, was outflanked and cut off from the main body. Declining to abandon a wounded officer, these forty men succeeded in gaining a kopje and gallantly defended it all night against 800 burghers. In the morning they were skilfully relieved by Captain de Montmorency and Captain Goldsworthy, and before the enemy retired some loss was inflicted upon them. The engagement was not one of any special significance, but it was a bright little piece of work, and the fact that, with the exception of Captain de Montmorency, all our troops were colonials is most interesting and satisfactory. Highly commendable, too, is the sterling pluck of Lieutenant Milford's little force in refusing to abandon a wounded officer, and in holding its own against an enemy twenty times its strength. As a termination to the bad old year the incident was especially gratifying, and was happily capped by a New Year's Day performance of even greater merit so far as actual results are concerned. On December 31 a force consisting of 200 Queenslanders, 100 Canadians, a horse artillery battery, 40 mounted infantry, and 200 of the 2nd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, left Belmont under Lieut.-Colonel Pilcher, Bedfordshire Regiment, and marched out westward some twenty miles in the direction of Sunnyside. On the morning of New Year's Day Colonel Pilcher advanced some six miles to Sunnyside, where he found the enemy in laager, and succeeded in surprising them by a simple but effective turning movement, resulting in the capture of the laager and forty prisoners besides killed and wounded. The Canadians and Queenslanders behaved admirably, and the action may be described as a complete success, which will go very far indeed towards strengthening the line of communications on the western border. As an immediate result of his victory, Colonel Pilcher entered Douglas, and as cavalry from Modder River have been co-operating with him, the re-occupation of Griqualand generally and the relief of Kuruman are expected to follow shortly.

Apart from these two incidental engagements there has been sustained and important fighting on the part of the main forces under Generals Gatacre and French, the latter especially having been most busily occupied to the north of Arundel. Having dislodged the enemy from Rensburg, General French started thence with five squadrons, half of the 2nd Batn. Royal Berkshire Regiment, eighty mounted infantry and ten guns on the evening of December 31, and early next morning occupied a kopje overlooking and to the west of Colesberg. The enemy's outposts were completely taken by surprise, and General French had no difficulty in enfilading the right of the enemy's position and in subsequently threatening his strong laager and position extending south-east of Colesberg as far as the junction. Some heavy fighting ensued, General French having succeeded in cutting the enemy's line of retreat, but not being able to dislodge them without reinforcements. These were despatched from De Aar on the 3rd. On Thursday a Boer force, estimated at 1,000 men, marched from Colesberg during the night, and attacked the left flank of General French's force at five o'clock in the morning. Half a battalion of the Suffolk Regiment and two companies of the Royal Berkshire Regiment were first engaged. The enemy kept up a steady and persistent fire and attacked with determination. Four guns of the Royal Horse Artillery were moved up and opened fire, compelling the Boers to draw back a little for shelter. The Suffolks and Berkshires still kept up a hot fire, while the 10th Hussars and a detachment of Royal Horse Artillery moved against the right flank of the enemy. The Boers retired upon a kopje. After some time the mounted infantry dismounted and charged the position. The defeat was complete. Nineteen prisoners were taken, while the enemy lost about fifty killed and wounded. Our losses were very slight, but unfortunately included Major Harvey, 10th Hussars, who was killed gallantly leading his men. A feature of the fighting was a charge made by a squadron of the Inniskilling Dragoons. At the commencement of the attack they cut their way clear through a body of Boers, who fled before them.

It may safely be anticipated that eventually General French, who has shown himself a very level-headed as well as dashing commander, will succeed in dislodging the enemy with loss from their position and in reoccupying Colesberg. The moral effect of this would be excellent, and, indeed, the results already achieved by General French are quite remarkable. His promptitude in following up the enemy from Rensburg, his capital scheme of attack on Colesberg, his swiftness of perception and action in cutting off the enemy's retreat, have all been admirable and add largely to an already brilliant reputation. Incidentally, it goes without saying that his success strikes the keynote of our previous failures. The mobility of his force has enabled him to effect surprises and to carry out turning movements which are naturally impossible with infantry on foot operating against infantry mounted. It is to be hoped that the effect of his movements will now be emphasised by the work of General Gatacre, who has also been using his mounted troops to excellent purpose. On January 3 an outpost between Cyphergat and Molteno was attacked by about 3,000 Boers, but the attack was repulsed. The repulse was accentuated by a rapid movement on the part of General Gatacre with mounted troops and the 79th Field Battery to the front of Sterkstroom, where the enemy were found strongly posted on the Coperberg, commanding the Cyphergat road and approaches. The enemy were dislodged by our artillery and fled towards Stormberg. Thus at three points outside Natal we have started the New Year with successes which, if not of first-class importance, are, collectively, of considerable moment, and afford a pleasant contrast to the enforced inaction of Lord Methuen at Modder River and of Sir Redvers Buller at Chieveley.

Turning to Natal, it seems probable that we may soon be hearing of very important, possibly momentous, events in this direction. There is every reason to suppose that a concerted movement on the part of Sir Redvers Buller's force and on that of the Ladysmith garrison will be attempted almost immediately, and the result will certainly influence the future of the campaign to a very considerable degree. The difficulty, of course, is that the Boer position is so strong that a fresh frontal attack is out of the question, and so long that flanking movements are well nigh impossible. To speak frankly the hope of success is not very great; but, on the other hand, if success is achieved at all, it will probably be of a very striking and significant description. Of one thing we may be sure, namely, that this time no needless risks will be run as was the case with the guns at the battle of Colenso, which we must all admit might have had a different termination if the second crossing had been duly supported. Assuming that a fresh attempt be made to bring the siege of Ladysmith to an end, the campaign will thenceforth be conducted on an entirely new basis. Either such a shattering blow will be dealt as will enable Sir Redvers Buller to clear Natal of invaders within the next few weeks, or another halt will have to be made to give Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener time to formulate an entirely new scheme of operations. But the main feature of the situation will remain the same. Our determination to "see this thing through" is now irrevocable, and no power on earth can hope to successfully withstand such a body of public and Imperial opinion as now backs the Government in its resolve to crush the South African Republics once and for all. Little Englandism in this connection has died a natural death. Continental jealousy and anxiety to profit by our misfortunes are toning down to sober recollection of the circumstance that the British fleet is just as ready as it was three months ago to argue any little point of international difference with any combination likely to be brought against it. The colonies, influenced by the fine display of fighting quality their representatives have already made in the field, are in a general blaze of patriotic enthusiasm, India is full of generous loyalty, and at home the Auxiliary forces are in a state of fervid eagerness to be further included in the plan of campaign. Rightly or wrongly the spirit of the Empire has been aroused to a pitch which it has never before attained. Explanation and justification apart, the fact remains that the true military situation in South Africa to-day is not so much the actual position of our troops as the circumstance that the British Empire has acknowledged this war to be a matter of Imperial concern and is prepared to expend all its resources if necessary in bringing it to a satisfactory termination.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

A LEADING article in the Morning Post of Thursday, commenting on a letter from Lord Ernest Hamilton, gives a correct statement of the actual constitutional position of the Cabinet, the War Office, and the Parliament. If it is true that each member of the Cabinet is responsible for the actions and policy of Mr. Chamberlain, there will be some difficulty probably in Ministers establishing a claim to the support of their constituencies, if they be members of the House of Commons. The Marquis of Salisbury and the Duke of Devonshire are dwarfed in the public eye by the flamboyant personality of the Colonial Secretary, who seems to fancy that he is not only in charge of the colonies but that he is Minister of War, as the Secretary for the Colonies was wont to be before the outbreak of hostilities with Russia in 1854, and sends his felicitations to the Dominion on the behaviour of the Canadian troops in Imperial style off his own bat. The fact of the matter is that the Army is not particularly interested in the question, however it may benefit and may suffer. It would be quite as well indeed, seeing that all the scalp hunters are busy sharpening their knives for a general onslaught on the department, that those who wish to keep any hair on their heads should wait till the hunt is over and the victims have suffered before they look for official responsibility. The pack that tried to hunt down Sir William Butler have been whipped off, and now it is said that the warnings and advice of that officer were in unison with the opinions expressed by Lord Wolseley in regard to the course taken by Government. It is the duty of those in authority, military and civil, to defend the generals and the troops under their orders from accusations which would destroy the public confidence if they were at all sustained by trustworthy evidence, of which as yet there has been no shadow or substance. But criticism of tactics and even of strategy cannot be hindered, even if it were desirable that it should be altogether suppressed. There has been no indictment that is worthy of serious consideration brought against the officers in command in South Africa, unless it is held that a mistake, from liability to which no general is free, for every general is a mortal man, can be justly made subject of serious censure, tantamount to an expression of want of confidence and actual blame. It is not to be wondered at, perhaps, that a disposition has been shown in the press, the outcome of much that is said in private, to express a certain irritation at the reverses which our arms have sustained, and which have been frankly acknowledged by the officers who were in command of the troops engaged in the unsuccessful operations.

Correspondents have sent to favoured papers in the provinces revelations of the intentions of officers in high places which may be true, but which if true would certainly not be conveyed to those who transmitted the intelligence for publication. The Commander-in-Chief, we are told, protested from the very first against the meagre preparations of the Government. Field-Marshal Viscount Wolseley is a member of the Defence Committee, he is the military adviser of the Secretary of State for War. To whom were the protests referred to by the London correspondents addressed by his lordship? If, as is stated, he contemplates making a clean breast of it there must be a great change at the War Office one way or the other. It would be interesting to inquire to whom the Cabinet would turn to fill the vacancy in the military or civil side of the great department in Pall-mall. Promotion by seniority at the Horse Guards would not answer; the system is out of favour.

Army Notes.

For the second time since the opening of the campaign our troops at the front have been passing through a period of forced inaction. A second army corps, supplemented by mounted troops, is on its way to reinforce the first, now seen to be wholly inadequate in a war that daily makes more extensive demands on the nation's resources. To the critics of the war, of its generals, and of their operations, this period of inaction has offered an opportune occasion of which they have availed themselves freely, and it must be admitted that many weak spots have been revealed in our armour by which the shafts of fair criticism may enter. The lack of foresight and of prudence that has for years permitted the Boer Republics to lay in vast stores of magazine rifles and quick-firing cannon, and to recruit in the countries of Europe for a war manifestly to be waged against Great Britain, has been proclaimed by a vigilant press as from the house-tops. But the actual war with all its dread reality having come upon us, as it was bound to do, the want of prescience of Governments in the past has been eclipsed by the absorbing interest of the present, and by common consent put aside for the moment in the spectacle offered by the heroism of our troops. It is to the armies in the fighting line that all thoughts are turned to-day, and there are matters of life-and-death import to them that are causing perturbation of mind and giving rise to anxious and searching inquiries. Why, it is asked, is the arduous task of our unrivalled infantry to be made harder because their supporting guns are too few, while those that are available are out-ranged, if reports speak truly, even by the enemy's field guns? Why, it may be asked, is the British Army, alone among the great armies of Europe, without a quick-firing field gun, and what is the explanation of the absence of a shell more suitable for the attack of entrenchments and guns in position than shrapnel—a projectile specially designed and adapted for combats in the open? Why, again, are our generals robbed of the fruits of their hard-fought and dearly-won battles through the want of cavalry and horse artillery to turn victory into rout? Kimberley might now be in Lord Methuen's hands had his cavalry been in sufficient force to follow up the retreating Boers after the battle of Belmont. Graspan might never have been fought. It may pertinently be inquired why field howitzers and ordnance sufficiently powerful to resist siege guns were not present in South Africa in the early days of the campaign, to be thrown into Ladysmith and Kimberley when the possibility of those places being beleaguered was manifest? It is not creditable to those who are responsible for the maintenance of the land forces in an efficient condition that from first to last during the war, so far as it has gone, the Army has been absolutely dependent upon the sister service for ordnance of sufficient capacity to enable it to obtain the mastery. Such has been the case at Ladysmith ever since the timely arrival of the naval brigade which saved the situation on the critical day of Farquhar's Farm and Nicholson's Nek. Such is the case to-day, when both at the Modder River camp and at Chieveley the naval guns at all points dominate the positions of the enemy. Of the conduct and efficient working of the field batteries nothing too laudatory can be said; and if their guns are not yet quick-firers, if they are in range less far-reaching than they should be—if, again, they are supplied only with shrapnel shell—the meed of praise to which they were entitled becomes all the greater for the disadvantages under which they labour. But the discredit due to these shortcomings still remains, and should be brought home to those with whom the responsibility rests. Still more pertinently it may be asked why our land transport has been, and is still, so deficient that in all our operations the generals have been compelled to hug the railways, and to deliver in every engagement the frontal attack, unrelieved by strategic movements to divide the enemy's attention and threaten his flanks and rear? These and other kindred questions will continue with increasing persistence to be raised and dwelt upon, with many reflections on the Government and the War Office, some just and some unjust, until stirring events at the front become again the more absorbing topic.

In view of the dead-lock which has existed in the South African theatre of war for the last three weeks, the wisdom that launched Lord Methuen's flying column on its heroic march to the relief of the diamond city may fairly now be criticised from the point of view of the strategical advantages gained by the operation. On November 21 this column, lightly equipped and numbering some 7,000 or 8,000 men, including a single cavalry regiment, started from Orange River, where its concentration had been effected. Two days later the enemy's position at Belmont, eighteen miles north-east of Orange River, was assaulted before sunrise and carried with the utmost gallantry at the point of the bayonet, the Guards having the post of honour and suffering the greatest loss. With an adequate force of cavalry the victory would probably have been converted into a rout. On the 25th was won a second victory at Graspan or Enslin, six miles north of Belmont, in which the naval brigade suffered greatly, the marines losing over 42 per cent. of their numbers. After the brief lapse of three days the third and fiercest engagement was fought at Modder River, and ended victoriously for the British, as the enemy evacuated their position after the battle under cover of night. By this victory Lord Methuen was carried to the north of the Riet River, fifty miles on the way to Kimberley. He had then to rest his troops, exhausted by fatigue and sensibly reduced by losses in action, as well as to await reinforcements, repair the railway, and make a bridge to span the river. It was not until December 11 that he was able to renew the offensive. On that date with about 10,000 men he assaulted the Boers in their almost impregnable position at Magersfontein, but failed to drive them from it, the Highland Brigade being surprised in the dark in close formation, and terribly cut up. Since the battle of Magersfontein the flying column has remained inactive in its entrenched camp on the northern bank of the Riet, blocked in front by superior forces in a fortified position that defies a second frontal attack, and from which the constantly extending trenches to east and west are rendering a flank movement by the British in their present force impossible. In front of Lord Methuen lies Kimberley, at a distance of twenty miles, still beleaguered, and without any early prospect of succour.

The gains through this adventure may be summed up thus: a strip of some fifty miles of British territory traversed by a railway has been wrested from the invaders, three sanguinary battles have been fought by our arms, the spread of disaffection amongst the western Dutch has been to some extent checked, the Boers have learned to respect us as foes, the spirit of our troops has been raised, and the admiration of their countrymen excited to the utmost, the pressure on Sir Redvers Buller has been reduced by the withdrawal of thousands of Free Staters to swell the force that barred Lord Methuen's advance, and a considerable body of the enemy is held inactive. Against these not unsubstantial gains must be put down a heavy roll of killed and wounded, the loss of the decisive battle, and the consequent failure, for the present at least, of Lord Methuen's mission, which was by means of a flying column to carry the relief of Kimberley in the shortest possible time. It is easy to conceive, however, that his case might be worse, since it is doubtful whether a victory at Magersfontein, and the consequent relief of Kimberley, would have given him the dominating hand. The Boers when driven from their entrenched positions are by no means beaten; they never will be beaten thoroughly without a strong force of mounted troops to follow them up—such a force as the Imperial Yeomanry should prove to be. It is more than probable that the Boers would again have closed in on Lord Methuen's rear, massing between Kimberley and the small force he must have left entrenched round Modder River bridge, and the last state would for him be worse than the first. As it is, his concentrated force is able to neutralise many thousands of the enemy, whereas if shut up with the Kimberley garrison he would but augment their difficulties and jeopardise his post at Modder River.

If any doubt be cast on the wisdom of the strategy that dictated Lord Methuen's march, it is only fair to show whether any other course lay open, assuming it to have been imperative to make some effort to raise the siege of Kimberley. There was the alternative of an invasion of the Free State from the south and an advance on Bloemfontein. On November 21 Lord Methuen's column advanced from Orange River some 7,000 or 8,000 strong. Before the battle of Magersfontein on December 11 its strength had been raised to about 14,000. This force might have concentrated at Naauwpoort Junction instead of at Orange River, and, strengthened by General French's cavalry and mounted infantry, it might presumably have forced the Orange River with but slight opposition at the time and seized the railway leading to the Free State capital. The gradual concentration of British troops at Naauwpoort would have drawn in the Free Staters from the western border and from Natal, almost automatically giving relief to Kimberley and Sir Redvers Buller, and possibly also causing the Boers massed in front of General Gatacre at Stormberg to return to the north of the Orange River. The distance from the Orange River to Bloemfontein is about 115 miles, and as the country is comparatively flat and suitable for the movements of all arms, the capital might even now be in our possession, or within measurable distance of the British. The war would have been carried into the enemy's territory, and possibly two out of the three serious checks sustained by our arms might have been avoided. It is no doubt easy to be wise after the event, and in making the foregoing remarks we claim no superior wisdom.

Many things are clear to-day which were not clear on the outbreak of war. For instance, everyone sees now that Ladysmith and Kimberley could well have held out until the whole of the army corps arrived, and every preparation was made for an advance on Bloemfontein in overwhelming strength. When Sir Redvers Buller reached Cape Town, however, all three towns were supposed to be in a precarious position, and, like his predecessor in a similar situation, he thought it was his duty to relieve the sorely-pressed garrisons before he began his march on the Boer capitals. In the circumstances perhaps he was wise, but the force at his command was not large enough to allow such a modification of the original plan. Hence the disaster at Stormberg, the check at the Modder River, and the check on the Tugela. To throw all the responsibility on our generals in the field would be so ungenerous and so unfair that the English people are not likely to be guilty of it. They may have made mistakes and not taken sufficient precautions in minor details, but the fact remains that, as usual, they have been asked to accomplish much with little means. It was not Sir George White's fault that Ladysmith was provided with such inferior guns that he would have been forced to surrender long ago only for the arrival of naval guns the day before his communications with Durban were cut. It was not Lord Methuen's fault that he was unable to follow up the battle of Belmont for lack of cavalry. It was not Colonel Long's rashness that led to the loss of guns on the Tugela, but the shortness of their range which compelled him to advance too close to the enemy. The home authorities, not the generals in the field, are responsible for the order in which the army corps went out to the Cape—infantry first, artillery next, and cavalry last—so that infantry have been practically attempting to do the work of cavalry. More than one department of the War Office is in fault, and this is especially true of the Intelligence Department.

In the Daily Mail of Wednesday appeared a most graphic and interesting account of the Modder River column from the pen of Mr. Julian Ralph. He makes it clear that it was the accuracy of our fire alone which forced the Boers to retire from a position that was apparently impregnable. His explanation may not be the true one, but it has an air of probability, and he is the first to account for the most surprising circumstance of the Modder River battle. To begin with, the Free Staters were so unnerved by our well-directed fire that they compelled the Transvaalers to occupy a less advantageous position than they might have done, which accounts for the presence of the enemy in the bushes by the river, as events proved the source of their weakness. Every inch of the ground was torn and broken, and every object on its surface riddled with shot. The loss of life on the Boer side must, therefore, have been very great, 300 at the least, and Mr. Ralph was told by prisoners that many of the Free Staters were kept to their work by threats of instant death should they attempt to desert. After seeing the ground where the battle raged fiercely, he is inclined to credit the truth of the statement. That the burghers of the Free State are more lukewarm in their support of the war than their northern neighbours is not only borne out by independent evidence from all sides, but it is in harmony with known political facts. The Boers of the Transvaal may imagine they are fighting for their independence; the more enlightened Free Stater without a grievance can labour under no such delusion. For this reason the advance of our generals on the Orange River presents fewer difficulties than the advance of Sir Redvers Buller on the Tugela. Even more interesting is Mr. Ralph's graphic pictures of the sufferings of our men, who are obliged to march long distances in a sandy region without a drop of water to moisten their parched throats. How admirably they have displayed the best soldierly qualities of their fathers all the world knows. No praise could be too great for our officers and men, who are well upholding the glorious traditions of the past—traditions which, unfortunately, some among us are inclined to ignore.

The Sunnyside victory, small as it was, has a chance of being remembered in English history when many a greater battle is forgotten, for it was achieved by colonials, who have hurried across the ocean in defence of the national flag. For the first time on record Australians and Canadian Volunteers have stood shoulder to shoulder on the field of battle to vindicate an Imperial principle. For the first time on record they have together won a victory and hoisted the Union Jack in a village, from which they have driven rebels in arms against the Queen. Of their own free will they have elected to take part in the war, and how valuable their services are every day brings forth fresh proof. At Sunnyside they showed the steadiness, bravery, coolness, and judgment of the British soldier, and against the enemy, that they even beat him at his own game. In Australia it may be readily imagined with what emotion the news of Sunnyside will be received, for it is the first time in her history that any of her sons have fought on a field of battle, the New South Wales contingent not having seen active service in the Soudan. With the Canadians the case is different. They have added fresh lustre to an honourable military tradition. They have fought side by side with British Regulars on many a field, and Canadians have fought with distinction in every war, great and little, since Canada became a part of the British Empire. Moreover, her French Canadian population have the splendid memory of Chateauguay, where, under Colonel de Salaberry with 300 Voltigeurs, an army of Americans, thousands strong, was utterly defeated: her English population, the memory of Queenstown Heights, which were successfully stormed by the York Volunteers against a greatly superior force. Sunnyside was, however, an achievement in which Canadians feel another kind of pride, because it consecrated their loyalty. They fought, not for their homes and country, but for the honour of the Empire and the British flag.

The letter of Colonel Lonsdale Hale addressed the other day to the Times might be read with advantage by those critics of our war in South Africa who are so ready to blame the generals at the front for all the failure of operations. Colonel Hale is a student of tactics, and, as he says, the "theories of war and battle are of little value until proved sound by the results of actual practice." Our generals in the field at the Cape have had to play an uphill game, and if as yet there has been little of actual success to record it has to be borne in mind that "the positions occupied by the Boers have been some hundreds of feet above the starting points for the attacking forces." Our troops have been the attackers, and have consequently been seriously handicapped. Our generals have had to adopt frontal attacks "as Hobson's choice, with the full knowledge that the previous shaking of the defender's infantry by artillery fire, an axiom of modern tactics, has been incomplete." The generals whom some are so ready to condemn have had no opportunity up to now of explaining what the actual situations were which they were called upon to face. Colonel Hale puts the case clearly when he says, "I have heard judgments given with respect to the capture of the two battalions"—at Nicholson's Nek—"but before any opinion worth having can be formed it will be necessary to have available the evidence of many people, some of whom are prisoners at Pretoria and others shut up in Ladysmith." The critics are too ready to jump at conclusions. Is it to be supposed that generals exercising command will rush headlong into perilous enterprises regardless of all consequence both to their own reputations and the lives of the brave men who are carrying out their orders, and doing it with such splendid gallantry? The supposition is absurd. Colonel Hale has for some years past been recognised as a fairly free lance in the department of military criticism, and we feel certain that he would not write as he does now unless he felt that the occasion was one which demanded more generosity of feeling than some seem disposed to display. "Since 1870-71," as he puts it, "war under modern conditions has been a subject of at once the widest and the wildest speculation for thought among soldiers of all armies alike." At present the grounds upon which the censure of our generals is based is at least unsubstantial and incomplete. In these circumstances we agree with the able military correspondent of the Times that it is due to those exercising command that the British public should wait events, and give a body of gallant soldiers the benefit of any doubts which may exist as to the wisdom of their course of action in the initial phases of what all recognise to be a big war, in which the forces of the enemy are admitted to have been underrated.

The gentlemen who fill the arduous posts of correspondents with our Army in South Africa lose now and then all sense, or at least a good deal of the sense, of proportion in their despatches, but it is probable that those who manage the appropriation of the head-lines in the papers are occasionally responsible. This day week we were cheered by the account of considerable successes obtained by a leader who has done so well in his own way already that we are prepared to give him credit for good work when he is on the war path, and the occupation of Colesberg by General French, officially reported to the War Office on Tuesday, has not been confirmed. Headings such as "Six Hours' Fighting" attract the eye of readers who devour paragraphs about an insignificant skirmish in which our men, "after feeling the severity of the Boer fire," return to camp "without any casualties"! This week more than half a column of the centre page of a great daily was devoted to a telegraphic despatch respecting a reconnaissance in which a body of scouts, colonial troops, and Cape Mounted Rifles were engaged from two o'clock on December 30 till next day with 800 Boers, who were said by the correspondent who sent the telegram to have displayed little courage and to have shot very badly. These accounts are costly to send and afford little satisfaction to a public hungering and thirsting for something decisive, which they will have to wait for some time yet. Detailed narratives of these small encounters on the fringes of the hostile forces do injury; they expose us to ridicule.

Perhaps it is not surprising that the military papers of the Continent say hard things concerning our operations in South Africa. With national prejudice there is, doubtless, linked a desire to discover confirmation of the depreciatory criticism which has generally been offered of our military system, mainly because it differs from that which is almost universal in Europe. The Revue du Cercle Militaire is one of the few journals which are content to record events, though it seems to labour under the delusion that Sir George White attempted and failed to cut his way out from Ladysmith. At the other end of the scale is the Echo de l'Armée, which seems to surpass itself week by week in shameless mendacity. It now gravely informs its readers that, not content with the Dum Dum bullet, we have sent out a supply of explosive balls. These, it says, have an internal cavity filled with air, and when the ball strikes an object the weak walls are driven in, thus compressing the air, which causes the projectile to burst with explosive effect. With this scandalous misrepresentation it presents a series of "British atrocities" gathered from the Kölnische Volkszeitung—many of them alleged to have been committed while General Yule's troops were making their forced march into Ladysmith! Further, it professes to have gathered the opinion of General du Barail that, after General Buller's reverse, we are sure to be defeated. In the same columns we do not find Colonel de Villebois-Mareuil described as an "attaché," but as a volunteer. It appears that he was born in 1840, served in Cochin China, was wounded in the war of 1870, fought afterwards in Tunis, and was retired under the limit of age.

The France Militaire is not disposed to censure the tactics of Sir Redvers Buller, and throws the blame of the disaster upon the officers charged with carrying out his orders. We are told that they have not even applied the plain instructions of the drill book, and that at Stormberg and Magersfontein battalions were surprised in marching formation when rudimentary precautions had not been taken, while on the Tugela it was forgotten that artillery cannot dispense with infantry supports. The interpretation which our contemporary sets upon these facts is that small professional competence has been displayed, and it has severe censure for the Intelligence Department. In another article it draws a lesson as to the evil effect of fortifications, permanent or temporary, upon military operations. In many circumstances fortification leads to the locking up of troops in positions which may be valueless, and condemns others to the work of relief. It was a great mistake, we are told, of Sir George White to allow himself to be surrounded at Ladysmith. In expressing this opinion the France Militaire does not, of course, take into account all the conditions that led to our retaining that position—conditions which had relation to our holding the railway line at that point, and to the immense mass of stores which had been collected at an earlier date.

The Armeebblatt of Vienna indulges in many hard sayings at our cost. We have succeeded, it remarks, in losing a great many officers and men, and in creating something like a tabula rasa, upon which we must make new plans of campaign. We have committed the great error of under-estimating our enemy, though the Continent, we are told, was a good deal wiser, and the Viennese organ goes on to echo some of the harsh criticisms of the Militär-Wochenblatt. It regards the various estimates of our military strength, such as that put forward by the Pall Mall Gazette, as comical.

Our Berlin contemporaries, the Wochenblatt and Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, do not add materially to the discussion. The former is disposed to think that politics have played too large a part in influencing our plans, and both are agreed that our division of forces was a great strategical error. In regard to tactical matters they confess to being unable to understand how our troops were led into such positions as brought about our losses at Stormberg and Magersfontein, or why "all ordinary precautions were neglected at Colenso." On the whole, it cannot be said that continental military opinion is flattering; but it is as well we should know what others think of us.

It is the opinion of the Leipziger Tageblatt, in relation to the general conditions, that those Englishmen who have attributed to Russia an intention of taking immediate advantage of our misfortunes are wrong. Russia, on the other hand, wishes to see us still deeper in the mire, and believes that the longer the war is continued the more we are weakened, with the probability that we shall soon have the natives to deal with. The time will then have come, says the Tageblatt, for Russia to move. We cannot touch her at sea, since her trade is of small importance, except that which is carried on by over-land routes, while she has access to China, Afghanistan, and Persia. Such is the menace hanging over us that the Leipzig organ considers our attack upon the Boers to have been most frivolous in character. It does not seem to realise the fact that we were actually attacked, and that there are greater dangers to us than a theoretical movement on the part of Russia, which might not be so easy as the critic seems to imagine.

The announcement that the Duke of Connaught is to succeed Lord Roberts as commandant of the forces in Ireland has been received with great satisfaction, and in that distressful country itself with much enthusiasm. Keen soldier that he is, the Duke has made it abundantly clear that he would prefer to be at the front; hence he may take up his new duties with a certain amount of disappointment. While the nation sympathises with this feeling, it also recognises that, though his military qualities would be of great value to the Army in South Africa, his presence might prove embarrassing to our generals. Only in a great European war or a struggle for life do Royal Princes take their places in the field as a right, and the present war, in spite of our mistakes and unpreparedness, can hardly be described as the latter. In truth, the work which the Duke is about to undertake is more important to the wellbeing of the Empire than any he could do in South Africa. Men who see below the surface of our political life have urged again and again that Ireland wants sentiment as well as justice, tact even more than common sense. In other words, a member of the Royal Family whose title is Irish has, by living in the country, a better chance of winning the sympathies of the people than statesmen, however able, working from this side the water. It may not square with political theories, but it squares with human nature, especially as it is in Ireland. Not without reason she has felt herself neglected and left out in the cold, while England and Scotland were basking in the sunshine of Royal favour, a soreness of feeling which in course of time has developed into a sense of injury. The presence of the Duke of Connaught in the midst of her people will do much to remedy this deplorable state of things. To awaken the enthusiastic loyalty of a warm-hearted nation, so that England's weakness in time of trouble is turned into a source of strength, would be a triumph even greater than a victory in South Africa. The Duke of Connaught is in the right place at last.

A letter signed "D. Hastings Irwin" without date, addressed from Hayeswood, Hertford, Cheshire, to the editor of THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE seems to have been written by a gentleman who has a very poor opinion of the German Army, and to hold criticism of the German military papers in great contempt. Judging from the tone and temper of his letter we imagine the writer must be one of the rather numerous class who are responsible for the creation of the very unfavourable opinion abroad concerning Englishmen which has been discussed by the correspondents of all the leading papers in this country, and has been commented upon by correspondents in European capitals. But we should not have paid any attention whatever to the contents of the letter he has addressed to us were it not that Mr. Irwin has thought fit to make two statements concerning THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE which we characterise as entirely untrue. First, to use his own words, he says that we have been "foremost in never ceasing to eulogise everything connected with the German Army," and, secondly, that we "have been foremost in never ceasing to belittle our own." He goes on as follows: "Provided it was made in Germany it was all right and better than anything we could do here." However, the temper in which the communication was penned may have had much to do with peculiarities of phrase. "What, I ask," says our correspondent, "is German opinion worth in the present case? Their Army has never fired a shot for thirty years, and they have never carried out a campaign or manœuvred troops in such a country as South Africa. Let them criticise and abuse as much as they like, but do not let us by noticing their remarks lead them to suppose that we attach the smallest importance to them." We shall better the instruction by restricting the application of it to our correspondent.

The officers who served in the Indian Mutiny pass over to the majority year after year in increasing numbers. None of the survivors of that fiery ordeal will have heard of the death of George Hutchinson without sincere regret, especially those who belonged to the old Company's Army, of which he was such a fine type. A soldier, a politician, an engineer, an organiser, a chief of police, a most active and useful officer in the field; a friend of Henry Lawrence, of Outram, and of Lord Clive and Havelock; prominent in the operations in Oudh and at Lucknow, serving almost continuously as a Bengal engineer, a Staff Corps officer from the time he joined the Army of the Sutlej till he came home after 1875, and devoted his time, knowledge, and abilities to the work of the Church Missionary and of the British and Foreign Society, where he rendered conspicuous service. General Sir G. Hutchinson was a gallant gentleman whose life was devoted to the Service and to good works, and who was an example of what a Christian soldier should be through his honourable career.

Lord Roberts has applied to the War Office for a number of officers for special service in addition to the many who have already been sent to South Africa for special duty.

The new cavalry brigade about to be despatched to South Africa will be made up of the 7th Dragoon Guards, 8th Hussars, and 17th Lancers, M Battery R.H.A., two companies of mounted infantry, No. 3 Company A.S.C., and a bearer company and field hospital R.A.M.C.

It is perhaps only the inherent belief in official forms that led the persons responsible for the attestations of a picked body of Volunteers carefully selected by their commanding officers to put in the pleasing inquiry as to whether he had ever been in gaol. It might have occurred to the most obtuse official that a convict would not be sent up by the most easy-going commanding officer to the Imperial City Volunteers.

The Secretary of State for War has decided that service with an embodied Militia unit, or with a unit of the Regular forces, shall count, if of not less than one month's duration, as one annual training; if of four months' continuous duration, as two annual trainings. Attachment under paragraph 310 (c) Militia Regulations will not be counted as service for this purpose.

Dr. Miller Maguire, LL.D., will deliver a lecture at the Royal United Service Institution on Thursday next at 3.30 p.m. for a young audience, entitled "British and Boers." Tickets, 1s. each, can be obtained at the doors or by written application to the secretary.

Army Personal.

The Christmas message sent by the Queen to the troops in South Africa was: "To General—, I wish you and all my brave soldiers a happy Christmas. God protect and bless you all."

The list of New Year honours was published on Monday. Among them were these: To be K.C.M.G.—Colonel the Right Hon. Sir Joseph West Ridgeway, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the island of Ceylon and its dependencies. To be C.M.G.—Colonel Trevor Ternan, Acting-Commissioner in Uganda. To be K.C.B. (Civil)—Captain Abney, C.B., R.E. To be C.B. (Civil)—Major-General Festing, R.E., Colonel J. Leslie Macdonald, R.E., Lieut.-Colonel A. M'Hardy, R.E. To be C.I.E's.—Lieut.-Colonel M. J. Meade, I.S.C., and Captain G. O. Roos Keppel, I.S.C.

General Sir Charles C. Shute, K.C.B., Colonel of the Inniskilling Dragoons, attained the age of eighty-three on Wednesday last.

The night before Sir Redvers Buller left London for South Africa he was a visitor at the famous "Beefsteak Room" of the Lyceum Theatre. It is stated in the Daily Chronicle that, in conversation with Mr. Comyns Carr, the latter asked the general how long he expected to be away from England. "About six months," was the reply. "Six months is a long time," rejoined Mr. Comyns Carr. "South Africa is a long way off, Carr," said Sir Redvers. At the present juncture it looks decidedly as if General Buller did not speak by the card when he mentioned half a year as the probable duration of his absence.

Major-Generals C. Tucker, C.B., commanding the 7th Division, and Sir W. G. Nicholson, R.E., Military Secretary to Lord Roberts; Brigadier-General H. A. MacDonald, C.B., to command the Highland Brigade; and Colonel Neville Chamberlain, Private Secretary to Lord Roberts, and other officers left India on Thursday for South Africa in the steamer Dwarka, placed at the disposal of the Government free of charge by the British India Steamship Company.

Particulars are to hand of the death of Major-General Wauchope at Magersfontein:—

"He fell well to the front of his brigade, and his body was found riddled with bullets 15yd. from the Boer trenches. His weapons had been taken away. He survived the first volley, though his helmet was knocked off by a bullet. He then ordered the brigade to extend and the men to lie down in order to escape the enemy's fire. He was as cool as if on parade and quite regardless of his own safety. He made no attempt to take cover himself, and was killed by the second or third volley. The body lay where it fell, when a party went out under a flag of truce and recovered it. The Boers came out of their trenches to meet our people where the body lay. The news of the popular general's death caused profound gloom in camp. The scene at the graveside was most touching. Lord Methuen and his staff were present. The funeral procession was composed entirely of the Highland Brigade, headed by the pipers of the Black Watch. The Highland chaplain read the service, the Highlanders forming a hollow square round the grave. Several officers present, who had served under Gen. Wauchope in Egypt, gave way to tears as they gazed on his dead face, and the brigade filed past the open grave to take a last look at the general they loved so well. Wauchope lies buried beside a number of others who fell at Magersfontein. It was his wish if he fell to lie at rest among the faithful Highlanders who he loved with the soldier's love for those whom he has commanded and led to victory and perhaps death at the call of duty."

Major-General Sir Herbert Chermiside, commanding the 14th Brigade, left England on Thursday with the members of his staff in the Assaye from Southampton.

Major-General J. E. H. Prior, who is to command the 15th brigade of the South African Field Force, is lying ill with a severe attack of influenza, and his medical advisers have recommended that his departure should be delayed for a few days.

Brigadier-General F. W. Hemming, who has been commanding the cavalry brigade at Alder shot for the last three months, is almost the senior colonel of cavalry by length of service. He joined the 4th Hussars as Cornet thirty-two years ago. He has frequently been employed in the Intelligence Department, has been four times in active service, receiving two brevet promotions, and recently commanded a cavalry brigade in India for more than a year. The cavalry brigade at Aldershot is now under orders of mobilisation for South Africa. If seniority and claims stand for anything, General Hemming ought to be selected to proceed out in command.

Brigadier-General Sir E. R. Elles, R.A., has been appointed Adjutant-General of the Indian Army, vice Major-General Sir William Nicholson, R.E., who has left for South Africa to join Lord Roberts's staff.

Brigadier-General F. J. D. Lugard, C.B.—for such is the rank now conferred upon him—assumed on Monday at Lokoja the office of High Commissioner for Northern Nigeria at an impressive military parade. The Queen's proclamation was read "midst great enthusiasm."

Brigadier-General H. B. MacCall, D.A.G., Punjab, has been appointed to the command of the Peshawur District, vice Brigadier-General Sir E. R. Elles, officiating as Adjutant-General at Army headquarters, and Colonel F. H. Whitby, late Durham Light Infantry, has joined Sir Power Palmer's staff as D.A.G.

Colonel W. F. Kelly, C.B., has vacated his appointment as D.A.G. in Ireland and left England on Saturday last for South Africa to join the staff of Lord Roberts.

Colonel Sir Howard Vincent, M.P., who was to have commanded the infantry battalion of the City of London Imperial Volunteers, has failed to pass the medical examination on account of cardiac weakness. He will, nevertheless, embark for South Africa to-day in the Carisbrooke Castle in order to be of any possible use to the regiment either before or on its arrival at Cape Town. Colonel the Earl of Albemarle, 12th Middlesex (Civil Service) Rifles, will take Sir Howard Vincent's place, Colonel H. C. Cholmondeley, London Rifle Brigade, taking command of the mounted infantry section.

Colonel C. F. A. Turnbull, 1st Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, has been appointed to the command of the 32nd Regimental District, Bodmin, vice Colonel C. E. Knox, embarked for South Africa in command of a brigade.

The acceptance by the War Office of the services of Lord Stanley, M.P., who is a reserve officer of the Grenadier Guards, and who will join Lord Roberts's staff, will temporarily deprive the Government whips' department in the House of Commons of one of its most energetic and popular members. Viscount Valentia, who holds the office of Comptroller of the Household, will also be otherwise engaged when the session of 1900 is opened, he having been accepted for service with the Imperial Yeomanry.

Lieut.-Colonel J. Willcocks, C.M.G., commanding the West Africa Field Force, in a despatch published in Tuesday's Gazette, brings to notice a number of officers who are, he holds, deserving of recognition for services rendered in the Benin hinterland and other expeditions.

The officers mentioned are Captain F. M. Gillespie, South Wales Borderers, Lieutenants C. A. Ker, R.A., R. L. M'Clintock, R.E., and R. H. Mangles, the Queen's (Royal West Surrey) Regiment. Colonel Lugard, in forwarding the despatch to the Under-Secretary for the Colonies, endorses Colonel Willcocks's commendations, and adds the names of Dr. W. Poole, principal medical officer of the force, and Sergeant John Mackenzie, Seaforth Highlanders.

Lieut.-Colonel W. H. E. Dobbie, R.G.A., has taken over the new 3rd Militia and Volunteer Artillery District at Glasgow.

Lieut.-Colonel P. H. Hammond, R.F.A., who in the ordinary course would not have received the brevet of Colonel until the 16th inst., has been appointed Colonel on the Staff for Royal Artillery at Woolwich, and promoted to the substantive rank of Colonel in the Army.

Lieut.-Colonel H. L. Dawson, 9th Bengal Lancers, and Majors S. F. Biddulph, 19th Bengal Lancers, with other officers, proceed to South Africa with the reserve horses from India.

Lieut.-Colonel F. C. Ricardo, half pay, late Grenadier Guards, succeeds Colonel W. H. Mackinnon as A.A.G., Home District, on the latter officer taking over command of the City of London Imperial Regiment.

Majors A. G. Chichester, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Regiment, who went out to South Africa as a press censor with Sir Redvers Buller's headquarters, has been appointed Provost-Marshal, Natal Field Force.

Major R. B. Page, 1st Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers, is appointed District Inspector of Musketry at Malta.

Major W. K. Downes, D.S.O., has been appointed to the command of the 11th Bengal Infantry, vice Colonel V. A. Schaleh, appointed to the staff.

Major A. H. Leslie has succeeded Colonel T. H. Mackenzie in command of the 2nd Bombay Grenadiers.

Major C. G. F. Edwards, 5th Punjab Cavalry, is appointed Assistant Military Secretary to General Sir Power Palmer, commanding the troops in the Punjab.

Captain J. I. Lang, C.M.G., and 2nd Lieutenant G. W. Denison, R.E., serve on the commission which is about to go to Africa for the delimitation of the boundary of the British and French possessions west of the Niger.

Captain Evelyn Wood, Devonshire Regiment, who has been doing duty with the mounted infantry of Lord Methuen's force, has gone to Cape Town to await the arrival of Sir Herbert Chermiside, whose staff he joins.

Captain E. G. Curtis, 1st Batn. Bedfordshire Regiment, is appointed D.A.A.G., Eastern District, vice Major J. R. F. Sladen, East Yorkshire Regiment, proceeded on active service.

Captain C. S. Davidson, 2nd Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, is appointed A.D.C. to Major-General Prior, commanding the 15th Brigade in South Africa.

Captain G. W. Rawlins, 12th Bengal Cavalry, is appointed A.D.C. to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

Captain T. Carson, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, has been selected for the Adjutancy of the 5th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, vice Captain A. C. D. Spencer, whose five years expire on February 1, and Captain A. G. V. Chichester, 2nd Batn. Connaught Rangers, for that of the 4th Batn. Connaught Rangers, vice Captain R. N. A. Flanagan, whose term expired on the 1st inst.

Lieutenant E. H. Trotter, 1st Batn. Grenadier Guards, will be orderly officer to Colonel W. H. Mackinnon, commanding the City of London Imperial Volunteer Regiment, in South Africa.

Mr. Wyndham, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for War, has appointed Mr. John C. Bailey to be his Assistant Private Secretary (unpaid).

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

SUMMARY OF THE WAR.

Saturday, Dec. 30.

The Boers, fearing for their communications which were threatened by Gen. French's cavalry, left their entrenched position at Rensburg and returned to Colesberg, our cavalry at once occupying the position.

Sir Redvers Buller stated to have been reinforced since battle of Colenso by the large draft for 5th Dragoon Guards, two squadrons Irregular Horse, 19th, 28th, and 63rd Bats. R.F.A., 2nd Batn. Royal Lancaster Regiment, 2nd Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers, 2nd Batn. Dorsetshire Regiment, 1st Batn. South Lancashire Regiment, and 2nd Batn. Middlesex Regiment.

A telegram from Durban said: "The announcement of the vigorous measures adopted by the British War Office has caused great satisfaction throughout the colony, which has been intensified by the appointments of Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener. Nevertheless, much sympathy is expressed for Gen. Sir Redvers Buller in being thus robbed of the supreme command. Not only the whole army in the field, but the public both here and at the Cape, have the fullest confidence in Gen. Buller's ability."

Mr. Winston Spencer Churchill, in a telegram to the Morning Post, gave some particulars of the treatment of prisoners which may interest those who have friends in the hands of the Boers:—

"With regard to the treatment of the British prisoners of war, my personal opinion is that there is no cause for any anxiety as to the officers and soldiers at Pretoria. The Boers are certainly not a bloodthirsty people, and they are very desirous of deserving the respect of European nations by a correct observance of the usages of war. The only misbehaviour is by the Irish renegades, whose cowardice and brutality excite the disgust of the real burghers. The British officers are confined in the State's Model Schools. They are strongly guarded by police sentries armed with rifles and revolvers, and are frequently visited. There is a small yard with a few trees, and the only available exercise is a daily game of rounders. The Transvaal Government allows a daily ration of bully beef and groceries, but anything may be bought from the local tradesmen by writing an order. Under the Queen's Regulations no pay is given while the officers are prisoners. Therefore many of the officers are very poor, but the mess is well managed. Food is monotonous but plentiful, at a cost of 3s. a day. All the officers are very despondent at their inactivity, and life is dull. The gloomy reports of the Boer victories, continually exaggerated, aggravate the general melancholy, but relatives of the officers need have no fear for their life or health. The prisoners of the non-commissioned ranks have been moved, because of their great number, to a special camp 10 miles east of Pretoria Waterfall. Here they remain surrounded by numerous sentries and two Maxims, a bright electric light being turned on at night. The rations allowed by the Boers are very scanty—2lb. of bully beef weekly, bread, rice, and mealies. The soldiers having no money are unable to purchase tobacco, and are very unhappy. Efforts are now being made to obtain a small compassionate allowance from one of the newly-raised funds."

Reuter's telegram from Pretoria:—

"Long Tom," which was damaged at Ladysmith, has been repaired here, and is now on its way to the front. Gen. Lucas Meyer has returned to the front. He is quite recovered."

Notification made from the offices of the Imperial Yeomanry: "H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has graciously consented to be Colonel-in-Chief of the Imperial Yeomanry now being organised for service in South Africa."

Further proofs of the loyalty of the native Indian chiefs forthcoming. The rulers of Kashmir, Mysore, and Jodhpur offered to send troops and horses to South Africa. The Maharajah of Marwar (Jodhpur) placed every horse in his state at the disposal of the Government. Decision arrived at to accept a number of horses from each prince. Indian volunteers expressing the keenest desire to embark for the Cape.

Sunday, Dec. 31.

Capt. de Montmorency, V.C., 21st Lancers, with a party of his local scouts made a reconnaissance on Saturday morning from Sterkstroom to discover the position of the Boer force in the neighbourhood of Dordrecht, and found them at a place named Labuschagne's Nek, six miles north of Dordrecht. After about an hour's skirmishing a party of mounted Boers outflanked 40 men of the British force, owing to their refusal to leave a wounded officer. Under the command of Lieuts. Milford and Turner, of the Frontier Mounted Rifles, the little detachment defended themselves most gallantly against the repeated attacks of some 800 Boers. Early this morning Capt. Goldsworthy, Cape Mounted Rifles, came to their relief with 115 men and four guns, and was supported by Capt. de Montmorency with his scouts. The enemy retreated, and our guns opened fire, the Boers replying without effect. Our force was then withdrawn, the enemy never daring to come to close quarters. Our loss was only two wounded; that of the Boers was about 30, including eight killed. The Times correspondent at Arundel, telegraphing on Saturday, said "the Boers, fearing for their communications, which were threatened by our cavalry, have left their entrenched position at Rensburg and returned to Colesberg. Our cavalry occupy positions within three miles of the town."

Monday, Jan. 1.

Lieut.-Gen. French's plans having succeeded, and the enemy having been driven out, he decided to follow up his success promptly. He therefore left his camp late on Sunday night and started off with the object of turning the Boers' right flank. When day broke the British force was within striking distance, and while the infantry and artillery made a feint attack on the front of the enemy, cavalry and artillery got round, as arranged, on the right flank.

The Times published telegrams from special correspondent at Ladysmith, dated Thursday, Dec. 28, to the effect that the past 10 days of the siege had been marked by no special incident. The enemy maintained a desultory shelling until Dec. 26, when they recommenced a heavy bombardment. Their artillery practice showed improved accuracy, and the casualties had been more numerous. The garrison was beginning to feel the pinch of the siege, the sickness in the camp, the shell fire, and the reduction of rations all tending to make the situation severe; but all were confident and prepared to make every sacrifice that circumstances might require. Horse sickness has not yet appeared, thanks largely to the indefatigable zeal of the veterinary officers, who were earning the admiration of all.

Gen. French reported to Gen. Sir F. Forestier-Walker at Cape Town from Coleskop by heliograph message at two p.m.:—

"Leaving at Rensburg, holding enemy in front, half 1st Suffolk and section of Royal Horse Artillery, I started from there five o'clock in afternoon on Dec. 31, taking with me five squadrons, half of the 2nd Berkshire, 80 mounted infantry, carried in waggons, and 10 guns. Halted four hours Maider's Farm, and 3.30 this morning occupied kopje overlooking and to the west of Colesberg. Enemy's outposts taken completely by surprise. Daylight, shelled laager and enfiladed right of enemy's position. Artillery fire in reply very hot from 15pr. with Royal Laboratory ammunition and other guns. Silenced guns enemy's right flank, demonstrating with cavalry and guns to the north of Colesberg towards junction, where strong laager; enemy holding hill and position south-east of Colesberg as far as junction. Our position cuts lines of retreat via road bridge. Some 1,000 Boers with two guns reported retiring Norval's. All Rimington's scouts proceeded towards Achtang yesterday morning. Slight casualties—about three killed, few wounded. Details later."

Lieut.-Col. Pilcher, 2nd Batn. Bedfordshire Regiment, inflicted a crushing blow on a small party of Boers at Sunnyside, 30 miles north-west of Belmont, Orange River, by a force composed of colonial troops, taking a laager and 40 prisoners, besides killing and wounding a number of the enemy. Our loss was two killed and Lieut. Adie, Queensland Mounted Infantry, dangerously wounded. A Reuter despatch from Dover Farm, giving details of the affair, states that on Dec. 31 Col. Pilcher made a forced march of 22 miles from Belmont, having first taken precautions that no natives should leave the place to give information to the enemy. Early on Monday morning the force came in sight of the enemy's position, and was then divided into two columns, which advanced upon it from different sides: "The Canadian and Queensland troops behaved admirably, pushing forward and firing with the utmost steadiness, while the guns were worked with great precision." The enemy were driven out of their laager and retreated in confusion. Col. Pilcher reports in the highest terms of the gallantry of the colonials. Col. Pilcher had with him 200 men 2nd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, 200 Queensland Volunteers, 100 Canadian Volunteers with two guns, a horse battery, and 40 mounted infantry.

Reuter's correspondent reports very highly on the conduct of the colonial Volunteers. He said in a despatch published on Wednesday:—

"The colonial troops, who have been longing for a considerable time to be allowed to meet the enemy, have at last been given an opportunity to do so and have scored a brilliant success."

"When the enemy's kopjes were fully in view Col. Pilcher halted and made the following dispositions: Major de Rougemont, with the guns, and the Toronto Company, under Capt. Barker, with the mounted infantry under Lieut. Ryan, were ordered to form an independent column to converge on the enemy's laager, which was situated at the foot of the northern spur of a hill, and shell him thoroughly, while Col. Pilcher himself with the Queenslanders under the command of Col. Ricardo, A Company being under Capt. Chanvur and B Company under Capt. Pinnock, advanced from the south, and sent strong mounted patrols to the east. One patrol of four men under Lieut. Adie came suddenly upon 14 Boers, who opened fire, severely wounding Lieut. Adie. A man named Butler gave up his horse in order to carry Lieut. Adie out. Another man named Rose, whose horse bolted, pluckily returned to help Lieut. Adie. He received a bullet in the calf of the leg and his horse was killed. Meanwhile Lieut. Ryan, who had worked magnificently all day, reported the veldt to the right of the enemy clear, whereupon Major de Rougemont ordered the guns to advance at a trot, and arrived within 1,500yd. of the laager. The guns were unlimbered, and in five minutes they planted two shells among the enemy's laager and tents. Immediately the Boers were seen streaming up the kopje. The surprise was complete, the enemy being quite unaware of our presence until the shells fell among them. They lined the kopjes, however, and opened a well-directed fire on our guns, bullets flying right and left. I was privileged to carry an order to the Toronto Company to double into action. When I arrived and delivered the order there was great satisfaction along the line, and exclamations of 'At last!' were heard. The company rushed forward to within 1,000yd. of the enemy's position, whence they opened a hot fire on the kopje and completely subdued the enemy's fire. The guns under Lieut. Atkinson shelled the position with wonderful accuracy, while Lieut. Ryan with his mounted infantry worked completely round and opened fire on a few of the enemy who were ensconced among some bushes. All this time Col. Pilcher, with the Queensland contingent, worked steadily and quietly, adopting the Boer tactics, towards the enemy's position. About one o'clock Col. Pilcher directed the troops to move well to the left, taking advantage of every cover, while Col. Ricardo with A Company delivered a direct attack. The Queenslanders worked beautifully, taking advantage of every bit of cover and moving slowly but surely, shooting only when they saw the enemy. The Boers began to be nervous in face of this steady advance and gradually retired. The Queenslanders behaved very coolly, laughing and chatting while under fire. Col. Pilcher is full of praise of the men. No troops in the world could have behaved better under fire."

Lord Methuen's force, under Major-Gen. Babington, moved to-day in the direction of Koodoosberg, operating north of Col. Pilcher's advance, and preventing the arrival of Boer reinforcements. The correspondent adds that the reoccupation of Griqualand and the relief of Kuruman are only a matter of a short time.

The enemy on the Natal side, emboldened by Sir Redvers Buller's apparent reluctance to force matters to an issue, came out in greater force than usual during the morning to the left of Colenso. The naval guns at once set to work and, it is believed, did considerable execution. A party of Thorneycroft's mounted infantry made a reconnaissance close to the banks of the Tugela to spy the land. The enemy were found on the alert, turned a Maxim and an automatic Hotchkiss gun on the advancing troops, and caused them to retire. Our men fell back in extended order and with great coolness. Taking advantage of cover they steadily fired as they made good their retreat. The naval guns meanwhile played on the enemy, "one shell falling in the middle of a large body and doing considerable damage." The enemy inquired during the day by heliograph, "Why is Roberts coming? What has Buller done?" The answer returned to them was, "How did you like our lyddite on the 15th?" The Boer signallers replied with a single word, "Rats."

Between 400 and 500 men were sworn in at Guildhall to serve in the City of London Imperial Volunteer Regiment. The detachments from the various metropolitan corps marched to the Guildhall, headed by their bands. Before the enrolment began the Lord Mayor addressed the men, complimenting them on having voluntarily taken upon themselves the hardships and dangers incidental to a serious campaign, and reminding them that the sword could not be sheathed until British supremacy was established in South Africa. The swearing-in of the men was then proceeded with, the Lord Mayor handing to each a new shilling bearing the date of the New Year.

Tuesday, Jan. 2.

Lieut.-Gen. French occupied Colesberg village.

An official notification made that the Queen has accepted the services of 12 Militia battalions for duty outside the United Kingdom, viz., for active service in South Africa, 4th Batn. Royal Lancaster Regiment, 6th Batn. Royal Warwickshire Regiment, 3rd Batn. South Lancashire Regiment, 4th Batn. Sherwood Foresters, 9th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, 3rd Batn. Durham Light Infantry, and 4th Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. For garrison duty at Malta, 3rd Batn. Royal West Kent Regiment and 3rd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders. For duty in the Channel Islands, 3rd Batn. Devonshire Regiment and 3rd Batn. Suffolk Regiment; and for duty at a station to be named, 6th Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers.

Two Army Orders issued from War Office, and in the form of a Royal Warrant authorising the formation of a corps "to be entitled the Imperial Yeomanry," and setting forth the Secretary of State's instructions as to the conditions of service; the other prescribing the conditions under which the service of members of the Volunteer force will be accepted for duty in South Africa.

Telegram from Rensburg:—

"The New South Wales Lancers, under Lee, who were sent to prevent the looting of the wrecked commissariat train, were exposed to heavy musketry and shell fire. They took the best shelter which they could secure, and held their position for five hours, returning the enemy's fire. Two of their number were wounded and five horses were killed. At least three Boers were killed and several wounded. The position at Colesberg and on the surrounding hills is practically unchanged. The enemy are making a determined defence, but our men are gradually hemming them in on Coleskop. Colonials in best spirits and doing admirably."

Telegram from India:—

"Every native chief has now offered to send horses to South Africa. The Maharajah of Patiala is sending to Lord Roberts a splendid Arab charger as a present. The enthusiasm of the natives is everywhere most marked. The Queen having been kept informed by the Viceroy of the loyal spirit displayed by all classes of her Indian subjects, has sent through him a message expressing her warm appreciation of the spirit thus shown."

Telegram received from Ottawa :—

"Such is the enthusiasm of the colonists and so strongly do they feel on the subject of the Boer attempt to injure British prestige in South Africa that thousands of men would be forthcoming if required in support of the Imperial cause. Four hundred men of the 1st or Mounted Police and a cowboy battalion of mounted infantry have been enrolled out of double the number who offered for service from the north-west. Most of the men have brought their horses with them. In Vancouver several influential members of society have offered to raise a corps of 1,000 roughriders free of expense to the Government if their services are required. At present, however, the corps is not thought to be required. The patriotism of the French Canadians is at fever heat, so unjust is the attitude of some continental nations held to be in all the circumstances of the war."

The Tonnant Castle with the siege train and 20,000 rounds of 6in. lyddite shell, &c., arrived at Cape Town, also eight 6in. howitzer guns.

Notified that as a result of the interview which the Lord Mayor had on Tuesday with the Commander-in-Chief, a battery of artillery will form part of the City of London Imperial Corps, and, further, that the authorities approve of this battery being armed with Messrs. Vickers, Maxim's quick-firing 12½pr. guns, similar to those used by Lord Kitchener at Omdurman. These guns are not yet supplied to our own field artillery, but have undergone highly satisfactory trials, and it is believed, form part of the Boer armament. The four-gun battery of these quick-firing guns which the Lord Mayor has secured is the only one in the country, and is complete in every detail, including a supply of ammunition sufficient for all probable requirements, and more can be made for future contingencies. Col. the Earl of Denbigh, commanding the Hon. Artillery Company, has offered the necessary complement of officers and men from that corps, and is arranging all details with the military authorities.

Special Army Order issued from the War Office, with the approval of the Secretary of State for War, approving the employment of officers of the Army Reserve :—

"(1) Sanction has been given for a certain number of officers of the reserve of officers, not above the rank of major, to be called out for duty.

"(2) These officers will be employed (i) at the depôts of the regiments in which they have previously served; (ii) to fill vacancies in units; (iii) in certain other special employments.

"(3) Officers of the reserve of officers, who have served in the Regular forces, desirous of employment as above should send in their names as follows: Cavalry—through the Inspector-General of Cavalry to the Under-Secretary of State for War. Infantry—through the officers commanding the regimental districts of the territorial regiment in which they have previously served, to the Under-Secretary of State for War. Other corps and departments—to the Under-Secretary of State for War direct."

The Council of the National Rifle Association resolved :—

"That the war in South Africa having proved the great value of an irregular force of skilled marksmen for national defence, the council consider it very important that the formation of rifle clubs should be promoted throughout the kingdom, with the special object of making rifle practice accessible to the general population, and will be glad to afford every assistance in the formation of such clubs, and will welcome any suggestion in furtherance of this object."

Thursday, Jan. 4.

Telegram from the general, Cape Town :—

"I learn Dordrecht now evacuated by de Montmorency, who has occupied Bird's Siding, Indwe line. Moltene today is being attacked by enemy, who more or less surround police station, and who, by latest reports, are being forced back. Reinforcements of mounted infantry have been sent by Gatacre, as well as half-battalion by train to Bushman's Hoek, and battery of field artillery, under escort, along road to last place. Result unknown. Company of mounted infantry under Alderson has reconnoitred to Prieska and exchanged shots with rebel force north bank. No movement of Methuen or French reported."

The first troops of the 7th Division embarked for the Cape on board the Assaye, Goorkha, and Braemar Castle at Southampton, namely, the 2nd Batn. Norfolk Regiment, 2nd Batn. Lincolnshire Regiment, 1st Batn. King's Own Scottish Borderers, and 2nd Batn. Hampshire Regiment, all from Aldershot, with the staff of the 14th Brigade.

The last of the 46 battalions of Militia ordered for embodiment in November, the 3rd Batn. Northamptonshire Regiment, assembled for permanent duty at Aldershot under command of Col. S. G. Stopford Sackville.

Message from Pretoria :—

"General Lucas Meyer resumes the command of a division here. General Joubert has seen it reported in the English newspapers that he protested to General White against the use of lyddite. He denies that he ever thought of such a thing, and affirms that the Boers have up to the present not lost one man by that explosive."

The second batch of City of London Imperial Volunteers were enrolled with all civic ceremony at the Guildhall. The composition of the regiment up to date is : 1st Middlesex Volunteers, 37 men; 18th Middlesex, 21; 22nd Middlesex, 27; 15th Middlesex, 12; 1st V.B. Royal Fusiliers, 11; 2nd Kent Artillery, 12; 1st V.B. King's Royal Rifles, 10; 1st Surrey, 16; 3rd Royal West Surrey, 17; 2nd V.B. Royal Fusiliers, 8; 24th Middlesex, 7; Honourable Artillery Company Infantry, 40; 1st Middlesex Engineers, 8; 4th V.B. Royal West Surrey, 32; 1st London Engineers, 20; 7th Middlesex, 35; 3rd Middlesex Artillery, 28; 2nd London, 35; 3rd V.B. East Surrey, 40; 26th Middlesex, 8; 2nd V.B. East Surrey, 9; 2nd Middlesex Artillery, 21; 13th Middlesex, 30; 21st Middlesex, 50; 1st V.B. West Surrey, 12; 2nd Essex, 29; 12th Middlesex, 29; 4th East Surrey, 22; 1st Tower Hamlets, 26; 1st Essex Artillery, 14; 1st Essex, 28; Honourable Artillery Company Artillery, 42; 14th Middlesex, 8; 2nd V.B. Royal West Surrey, 22; 2nd Middlesex, 19; 1st London Artillery, 20; the London Rifle Brigade, 51; 3rd Essex, 23; 4th Essex, 22; and the 4th Middlesex, 5. The remaining 90 are to be enrolled in the presence of the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs at the Honourable Artillery Barracks, in Finsbury, on Saturday at 11.15.

Message read by Lord Mayor from the Queen received through Private Secretary: "I have to assure you how much the Queen values the corps which has been so patriotically raised by the City of London for service in South Africa."

Orders issued for the embodiment of 16 more Militia battalions—to be called up for permanent duty not earlier than Tuesday, the 16th inst., viz. :—

3rd Batn. Royal Lancaster Regt.
5th " Royal Warwickshire Regt.
3rd " Liverpool Regt.
3rd " Norfolk Regt.
4th " Lincolnshire Regt.
4th " Suffolk Regt.
4th " Cheshire Regt.
3rd " South Wales Borderers.
3rd " East Lancashire Regt.
3rd " Hampshire Regt.
3rd " Derbyshire Regt.
8th " King's Royal Rifles.
4th " North Staffordshire Regt.
4th " Durham Light Infantry.
3rd " Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders.

Friday, Jan. 5.

The position at the time of going to press was this: Gen. French again defeated the Boers with heavy loss at Colesberg. It was the enemy who commenced the attack. Our loss was not great, but unfortunately Major Harvey, 10th Hussars, was among the killed, and Major Alexander among the wounded. The Inniskilling Dragoons made a dashing charge through a strong body of the enemy with deadly effect. It has been deemed advisable to evacuate the towns of Douglas and Dordrecht, the British forces of occupation retiring to positions where they are likely to be of more general usefulness. In connection with this plan, the loyal inhabitants of Douglas are being escorted to Belmont, the local Canadians singing on the way, though footsore and done up, to cheer the women and children. On the other hand, the Boers have evacuated Moltene. Gen. Buller, by dint of accurate shelling, greatly damaged the Boer entrenchments near Colenso yesterday, and as he has made a hasty request for more stretcher-bearers, it is assumed that the shelling is the prelude to an advance in force by his men. Information comes to hand from a British source that on December 26th our garrison at Mafeking made a sortie and were repulsed with a loss of 21 killed and 23 wounded.

Col. A. G. Lucas, Loyal Suffolk Hussars, general supervision.

Lieut.-Col. E. W. Beckett, Yorkshire Hussars, finance.

Col. Viscount Valentia, Oxfordshire Yeomanry, enrolment and establishment. (Viscount Valentia will be succeeded, after embarkation, by Col. the Hon. H. G. L. Crichton, reserve of officers).

Col. T. A. St. Quintin, remounts.

Col. the Earl of Lonsdale, Westmoreland and Cumberland Yeomanry, saddlery and horse equipment.

Capt. the Hon. W. L. Bagot, reserve of officers, clothing and equipment.

Col. the Right Hon. Lord Harris, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., Royal East Kent Yeomanry, transport and shipping.

Mr. John Eaton Smith, secretary to the Committee.

Appointments at front :

Lieut.-Col. H. Graham, reserve of officers, Commandant at base depôt, Cape Town.

Sir Simeon Stuart, Bart., late 5th Dragoon Guards, and Major E. W. Baird, late 10th Hussars, staff officers to commandant.

Capt. R. N. S. Lewis, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, officer in charge of victualling, &c. on transports.

"Frere Camp, Jan. 5.

"Please express through press the best thanks of the troops in South Africa for the very great kindness they have received in Christmas gifts from home."

We are desired to announce that Mr. Hamilton Gatliff, who has undertaken the general distribution to the troops in South Africa, of parcels, &c. sent there, intimates that additional warm underclothing and tobacco would be acceptable for wounded soldiers coming home. All cases should be addressed to this gentleman at Cape Town.

Army Foreign.

The rededication of the flags and standards of the Guards corps took place in Berlin on Monday. At the ceremony were present in the quadrangle of the armoury the Princes of the Imperial Family who were in Berlin. On the arrival of the Emperor the ceremony of rededication was carried out by the Evangelical head chaplain. The Emperor addressed the troops. Their flags bore testimony, he said, to the momentous events of the century. At the beginning of the nineteenth century their country had been overtaken by a great disaster. The punishment which ensued was terrible, but the nation learned its lesson. The reorganisation of the Army was begun by His Majesty's great-grandfather, Frederick William III. But the work as it had ultimately been achieved was due to the conceptions and the silent, assiduous labours of the great Emperor William I., who had not allowed himself to be distracted from his great task by manifold and unintelligent opposition. Inspired by his spirit and reorganised in accordance with his ideas, the Army had achieved a series of victories which had surpassed all expectation. By means of the Army William I. had united the German races and had achieved for his country its appointed place in the council of the nations. It was now for the officers of the Army to maintain its efficiency by zealous work, by simplicity of living, and by absolute devotion to the interests of the Service.

The Cologne Gazette publishes a report of a lecture by Colonel Count York von Wartenburg, sectional chief in the German General Staff, to the Berlin Military Society on "Afghanistan and the Anglo-Russian Rivalry in Asia." The German Emperor was present at the lecture. Count York von Wartenburg concluded his address by instituting a comparison between the Russian and the British forces which would be available in a future war in Asia, and discussed the probable objectives of the operations of either combatant. The occupation of Herat by the Russians would probably be followed by the occupation of Kandahar by the British, and the real struggle would be for the possession of Kabul. In these circumstances the action of the Afghans, who can put 37,000 men in the field, would be of great importance.

It may, therefore, be assumed that the military struggle for dominion in Afghanistan would be preceded by a diplomatic contest for the alliance of the Ameer. The side which won in the diplomatic struggle would then press matters to the decision of war. The Ameer, in the opinion of the lecturer, would reconcile himself to the loss of Herat more easily than to the sacrifice of Kandahar, which, as compared with the Russian objective, is more in the nature of an integral portion of his dominions. It had further to be taken into consideration that England had frequently given way, while the Russians had hitherto invariably succeeded in attaining their object. The presence of the Russians in Kabul would be a serious danger for India, while if England succeeded in forcing her rival to evacuate Herat that would only mean a return to the present state of affairs. It was impossible for the English to strike a decisive blow at Russia in Samarkand and Merv; so that, while Russia only staked a portion of her power and political influence in Asia upon the struggle, England must stake the whole.

Colonel Pereyaslafets was put on his trial at Odessa on the 28th ult. before the military court of the district on the charge of corruption in the discharge of his duties as military chief of the recruiting department of the division. Charges of extortion having been proved against Colonel Pereyaslafets, the court sentenced him to deprivation of military rank, of all military orders in his possession, of all rights as a Russian noble, of all personal civil rights and property, as well as to dismissal from the military service and exile to the province of Tobolsk, in Siberia, for a term of one year. An additional prohibition was imposed against leaving that province for any other province in Siberia before the expiry of a further term of four years. The sentence requires the ratification of the Czar before being put into execution.

THE DRUMMOND INSTITUTION.

The Drummond Institution is the only home in Ireland for the orphan daughters of soldiers. It is irrespective of creed, and appeals to the sympathies of the Army as few other charities can do. There are at present 70 girls in the home, who are clothed, fed, educated, and trained to earn their bread, either as teachers or servants. It is supported by the interest on the bequest on the late Mr. Drummond, the founder, and by the annual subscriptions of corps, individual officers, and civilians.

The war which is now going on in South Africa, in which so many regiments are engaged, will affect the income of the institution seriously, not only in limiting the generous contributions hitherto made from canteen and charitable funds, but also from the loss of life among the individual subscribers, while at the same time the burdens thrown on the institution will in no way be diminished. The committee are therefore constrained to appeal to all corps in the United Kingdom and the colonies to help to make good the loss which will accrue to the annual income of the institution, owing to the regiments on active service having no canteens, and trust that those corps which have not already subscribed will do so, and that officers will also aid in benefitting the charity. Donations and subscriptions will be thankfully acknowledged by the secretary, W. Kirke, 77, Dame-street, Dublin. We can recommend the charity most strongly.

The annual general meeting of the Army Rifle Association will be held in the Levee Room, Horse Guards, Whitehall, S.W., on Jan. 11, at one p.m. Officers representing units, and other members who propose being present at the meeting, are requested to communicate to the honorary secretary not later than Jan. 7 any proposition which they may desire to bring forward.

PREVENTION OF ZYMOTIC DISEASES.—For greater security have the Drainage and Water Supply of your Town and Country or temporary Residences examined and certificated by The Sanitary Engineering Company (H. Carter, O.E. Manager), 65, Victoria Street, Westminster.—Fee quoted on receipt of full particulars. Established 23 years. Telegrams: "Sanitation, London."

21st (EMPRESS OF INDIA'S) LANCERS.

[WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.]

Ten years since we recorded the history and illustrated the uniform of the 21st Hussars, since converted to Lancers, and after their gallant achievement at Omdurman distinguished as the "Empress of India's." The regiment became Lancers in April, 1898, under the reorganisation scheme for the cavalry of the line which owed its origin to Major-General Sir George Luck, the idea being to raise the number of Lancer regiments to six, of which three might be at home and three on foreign service. It was a subject of regret in the regiment that it bore no battle honours upon its appointments. Its precursor rather than its predecessor, the 21st Dragoons, was raised by the famous Marquis of Granby in 1760, but was disbanded three years later, to reappear again in 1779, and to be disbanded once more in 1783. The regiment was called into existence for the third time in 1794, and it served in the West Indies and afterwards in South America, at the Cape, and in India, but it was disbanded at Chatham in 1820. These regiments were in no real sense the originals of the 21st Lancers, for the existing regiment was formed, like the 19th and 20th Hussars, chiefly out of the late regiments of Bengal European cavalry upon the amalgamation of the Royal and Indian Armies after the Mutiny.

The battle of Omdurman was the 21st Lancers' baptism of fire. The regiment reached the camp at Wad Hamud on August 23 and 26, 1898. It was under command of Colonel R. H. Martin, with Major W. G. Crole-Wyndham as second in command, and its four squadrons were under Majors H. Finn and J. Fowle and Captains W. M. Doyne and F. H. Eadon. The regiment moved from the camp on August 30, leading the advance with the other cavalry and the Camel Corps, and at about eight o'clock on the morning of September 1 its signalling officer, Lieutenant Clerk, was probably the first officer who saw the panorama of Omdurman and the surrounding country from the top of Kerrerri Hill. From that point the advance was made to Jebel Surgham, the ridge that overlooked the plain, and at eleven o'clock the Dervishes were seen to be in motion advancing to the number of nearly 50,000, and the cavalry patrols fell back. The night passed, however, without incident, and during the great Dervish advance on September 2 the cavalry, after clearing the front, retired into the zereba near the river. It was during the second phase of the action, when the British and Egyptian forces commenced their march on Omdurman, that the opportunity came for the 21st Lancers. At 8.30 a.m. the Sirdar signalled to Colonel Martin, "Annoy them as far as possible on their flank, and head them off if possible from Omdurman." The regiment accordingly moved out, and after proceeding about a mile and a half saw a couple of hundred Dervishes on a slight eminence, who opened fire on his patrols, which could not thus get sufficiently near to ascertain the full strength of the enemy in this quarter. The duty of the Lancers was, however, plain. With a view to outflanking the Dervish detachment the squadrons wheeled to the left into column of troops, but had not proceeded far at the trot when a heavy fire was opened upon them at about 300 yds. range. Only one course was then possible. "Right wheel into line" was sounded, and in an instant the Lancers were galloping to the charge. It was then discovered that the enemy was in great force, lying concealed in a deep fold of the ground. In length they very nearly equalled the front of the charging squadrons, and were about twelve deep. They probably did not expect the Englishmen to charge home, but the pace was quickened and the whole business was over in a very short time. At full gallop, and in close order, the Lancers struck the Dervish mass, and the men who stood to the last were brushed into the khor behind their position. It was one of those rare instances in which cavalry charge unshaken infantry, and the Lancers were wholly victorious, though the Dervishes stood to their guns manfully, tried to hamstring the horses, cut bridle reins and stirrup leathers, and fired their rifles with the muzzles often pressed into the bodies of their opponents. About sixty of the enemy were soon dead and dying on the ground, while many riderless horses of the Lancers were galloping across the plain. In 125 seconds, five officers, sixty-six men, and more than 100 out of 400 horses had been killed or wounded on our side. Meanwhile the Dervishes were preparing to resist another charge, but the Lancers wheeled by troops to the left, and, galloping round, brought about a complete change of front which further demoralised the enemy, who thereupon began to retreat swiftly, though in good order, towards the ridge of Jebel Surgham. Colonel Martin, busy with his command, drew neither sword nor revolver, but was untouched at the end of the charge. Major Crole-Wyndham had his horse shot under him, but extricated himself from the press, and was taken up behind Captain Kenna. Lieutenant Nesham was severely wounded and had a marvellous escape. The individual gallantry of members of the regiment won three Victoria Crosses, and it is recorded with satisfaction that, though the regiment suffered more heavily than any other, it took more prisoners also, while not a single wounded Dervish was killed, except when this became absolutely necessary and at the order of an officer.

On the morning after the battle the 21st Lancers moved round to the south of Omdurman, and three days later commenced the return to the Atbara. The Vedette, which is the regimental magazine of the regiment, remarked that the battle of Omdurman was its baptism of fire and steel, and that, though no long list of battles was upon its appointments, and it had no proud traditions handed down from wars in France or the Low Countries, it would be content to inscribe the word "Khartoum" as the first honour on its arms and as an inheritance to its successors. Captain P. A. Kenna, Lieutenant the Hon. R. L. J. de Montmorency, and Private J. Byrne received the Victoria Cross. Colonel Martin and nine of his officers were commended for good services, and seven non-commissioned officers and men for gallantry in the field. By an autograph letter from Her Majesty the 21st Lancers were authorised to assume the title of "Empress of India's Regiment," and to have French-grey facings (that having been the colour of the bushy bag when the regiment were hussars) in recognition of its bravery, instead of the Lancer blue tunic with scarlet facings which had been originally decided upon. At a later date Colonel Martin, who had left the command, and Lieut.-Colonel Crole-Wyndham were made Companions of the Bath, and Lieutenant Pirie a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, while Major Finn received the brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, and Captain Eadon of Major. The medal for distinguished conduct in the field was given to the seven non-commissioned officers and men who had been commended for their gallantry. Our picture represents the 21st Lancers in the Sudan kit of 1898 and in their home-service full-dress and undress uniform.

The name of Lieut.-Colonel T. E. Hickman will ever stand in a foremost place among commanding officers of the 21st Lancers. This gallant soldier was promoted to the command of the 21st Hussars from the 14th Hussars on August 17, 1887, and died in command whilst the regiment was at Secunderabad, October 26, 1892. So devoted was he to his regiment that when urged to return home on sick leave for medical advice, he refused to do so, saying, "I prefer to die in my proper place in command of the finest regiment that any man ever commanded, a regiment that will distinguish itself if ever it gets the chance. My place is here and here I remain, let the consequences to myself be what they may."

SIERRA LEONE.

The despatches are published which were addressed to the Colonial Secretary by the Governor of Sierra Leone (Sir F. Cardew) relating to the operations undertaken during 1898 in the suppression of rebellion in that protectorate. In enclosing the despatch of Col. E. R. P. Woodgate, covering the whole of the operations, the Governor commends to the most favourable notice of the Colonial Secretary the very valuable services rendered by Col. Woodgate, as well as those rendered by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Imperial troops and Sierra Leone Frontier Police and by the district commissioners and other officials in the service of the Government. The Governor also brings to the most favourable notice of the Colonial Secretary the efficient manner in which the senior officers, Capt. A. L. Winsloe, Blake; Capt. F. H. Henderson, Fox; and Capt. R. S. Rolleston, Phæbe, co-operated, and also the valuable services rendered by the Fox, Phæbe, Blonde, Tartar, and Alecto. A gun force under Lieut. F. K. C. Gibbons, of the Fox, did good service in the defence of Port Lokko. Thanks were specially due to Capt. Henderson, who rescued Government officials and traders from certain death, driving off the insurgents by shell fire. Commander Peyton Hoskyns commanded several of the expeditions and covered with a gun force the advance of Lieut.-Col. Cunningham's column up the Jong River. Lieut.-Commander Holmes co-operated with Capt. Hoskyns in the boat expeditions and rendered valuable service. In conclusion, the Governor specially mentions the following officers for their services: Lieut. W. F. Benwell, Fox; Lieut. E. O. Gladstone, Alecto; Lieuts. G. H. Walsh, and E. W. Denison, and Mr. W. W. Hardwick, chief engineer, Blonde.

Col. Woodgate reports that the losses during the operations were: Imperial troops—four officers and 17 non-commissioned officers and men killed or mortally wounded, 14 officers and 94 non-commissioned officers and men wounded. Frontier Police—46 non-commissioned officers and men killed or mortally wounded, four officers and 72 non-commissioned officers and men wounded. Carriers—90 killed and 56 wounded.

A list of officers and non-commissioned officers whose conduct appears to be deserving of special mention accompanies Col. Woodgate's despatch. These include:—

Brevet-Lieut.-Col. G. G. Cunningham, D.S.O., Derbyshire Regiment; Capt. N. J. Goodwyn, Devonshire Regiment; Capt. F. M. Carleton, Royal Lancaster Regiment; Capt. O. H. E. Marescaux, Shropshire Light Infantry; West African Regiment.

Lieut.-Col. J. W. A. Marshall; Majors E. S. C. Kennedy (Brigade-Major), H. C. Buck, and C. B. Morgan; Lieuts. H. D. Russell, H. T. Eckersley, and N. E. F. Safford; West India Regiment.

Major A. F. Tarbet, 3rd Batn. South Lancashire Regiment, Inspector-General; Capt. H. G. de L. Ferguson, 4th Batn. Norfolk Regiment; Sierra Leone Frontier Police.

Capt. E. C. d'H. Fairtlough, D.S.O., 4th Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, District Commissioner; Capt. W. S. Sharpe, 4th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, District Commissioner; Sierra Leone Protectorate.

Major A. R. Stuart, R.A., commanding R.A.

Lieut. W. R. Howell, 1st Glamorganshire V.A.; Sierra Leone Volunteers.

Major R. Crofts and Capt. C. Dalton, R.A.M.C.

Major A. H. Thomas and Capt. J. M. Harrison, A.S.C.

Corpl. Greenidge, 1st Batn. West India Regiment.

Pte. Grant, 3rd Batn. West India Regiment.

Sergt. A. G. Wells, A.S.C.

Sergt. B. Thomas, West African Regiment.

ARMY RESERVE REGULATIONS.

The following special instructions have been promulgated to the Army with the approval of the Secretary of State for War:—

ENLISTMENT IN SECTION D.

(1) Men discharged from any arm of the Service, on the completion of their first period of limited engagement, may be attested for Section D within two years of the date of discharge. The words "two years" will, therefore, be substituted for "six months" in the last line but one of paragraph 9 of the regulations for the 1st Class Army Reserve.

(2) In the case of infantry of the line the qualifications and conditions laid down in paragraph 2 of Army Order 169 of 1897 will not be insisted upon. In the case, however, of men who have been trained as mounted infantry, or who possess the qualifications and agree to the conditions laid down in paragraph 2 of Army Order 169 of 1897, a note to that effect will be made on their attestation or re-engagement papers.

(3) In the case of cavalry of the line the restrictions laid down in paragraph 1 of Army Order 169 of 1897 will apply—i.e., men will only be allowed to join on condition that they accept the liability of employment, on mobilisation, as officers' grooms or as drivers, either in the cavalry or in any other arm of the Service.

(4) Pending a reprint of Army Forms D 459, D 421, and D 441, the necessary amendments in those forms will be made in manuscript. Infantrymen will be attested or re-engaged for "General Service Infantry."

TO MILITARY MEN AND OTHERS.—PIPECLAY SUPERSEDED BY PICKERING'S "BLANCO" for Whitening Belts, Helmets, Gloves, &c. "Blanco" removes stains and discolorations, and ensures evenness of colour, and a soft silky surface. Does not dust or soil. Much better, more convenient, and cheaper than pipeclay. No trouble of preparation. "Blanco" is sold everywhere in cup-shaped blocks, in sine non-corrosive boxes. Manufacturers: JOSEPH PICKERING and SONS, Sheffield.

THE BATTLE OF MODDER RIVER

[BY ONE WHO WAS PRESENT].

Camp, Modder River, South Africa,
Thursday, November 30, 1899.

On Tuesday, November 28, was fought the battle of Modder River. It commenced with an interchange of shots between our scouts and the enemy's front line at 5.30 a.m., and the firing, both artillery and rifle, continued almost without intermission till 1½ hours after sunset, when our troops retired about half a mile.

We, the naval brigade, slept in the train the previous night with our guns in the trucks. At daybreak we detrained and got our four 12pr. long-range guns into action on the left of the railway, facing N.E. It is said that our general had remarked before the action that he would be in possession of the town within two hours from the commencement of hostilities, and that he anticipated a brief skirmish with about 1,000 Boers. Instead of this, he had a very severe engagement of over thirteen hours' duration, against some 12,000 to 14,000 Boers. The naval guns endeavoured to silence the Boer artillery directly ahead of them, shell after shell apparently exploding right on their guns, but each time, to our great dismay and disappointment, the enemy again opened fire. They were, however, eventually silenced about four p.m.

On going over the enemy's position on the other side of the river on the following day, one could see several of our shell and hundreds of shrapnel bullets in the midst of the enclosure that protected the Boer guns, but, unfortunately, for reasons to be given later on, the enemy got away with the whole of their artillery. The gunners also did excellent work shelling the town and the other guns. So heavy was the fire that not a house escaped being struck, and the hotel was set on fire. To give the reader some idea of the heaviness of the fire, I took the following notes: A small stable built of mud walls, 4in. thick and covered outside with galvanised iron, the front wall, that is to say, the one directly opposed to our fire, 20ft. long and 10ft. high, contained the following apertures: (a) 10, produced by unexploded shells; (b) 3, irregular-shaped, by burst shells; (c) 571, by bullets; 7 are the exits of Mauser bullets fired by the enemy (these may be neglected); 31 are entrances of Lee-Metford fired by our troops; the remainder, 533, are all shrapnel. Most of these latter lay embedded in the mud wall; that is to say, they penetrated the iron but failed to penetrate the mud for more than ½in. All the Lee-Metford pierced the wall and entered that on the other side, but failed to pierce it. The Mauser, in like manner, pierced the front wall and failed to pierce the second. The reason that seven Mauser bullets pierced the front wall of the house, that is, the wall facing us, was owing to the fact that the rear wall of the house contained an open door, and the bullets that came through it had only one wall to traverse. The unburst shells passed through both walls, entered another house 50yd. beyond, and then exploded. These facts give a good idea of the heaviness and extreme accuracy of our fire, also of the great penetrative power of the Lee-Metford and Mauser bullets, and the feeble penetrative power, at all events, in this particular case, of the shrapnel bullets.

After about two hours' fighting, finding that it was extremely improbable that we should have any casualties, thanks to our long-range guns, I obtained permission to go further up to the front, where I knew there must be plenty of work to be done amongst the wounded. Our fighting line had now assumed the shape of the letter V with its sides extended, the angle of the V resting on the railway line and held by the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The two sides of the V were stretched out, and more or less parallel to the river, which was lined with Boer trenches all along the south side, the ends of the sides of the V receding slightly from the line of advance. Twice the Guards on our right attempted to cross the river, but failed. On the left the Northumberland Fusiliers and 9th Brigade made a similar attack and succeeded in crossing, two men being drowned in the effort. Now, and not till now, did we ascertain how very strongly the enemy were entrenched; in fact, their position was almost impregnable, and it seems a marvel that we were ever able to persuade the Boers to leave it.

We, with practically the whole of our attacking force, were marching across an open plain in full view of the enemy, while they were absolutely and completely hidden. They lay behind trenches, which extended along the near bank of the river for a distance of at least two miles. Behind their trenches the ground sank to the level of the river, so that their men, horses, and their largest waggons could travel along the whole of their position on both sides of the river with almost absolute safety from our fire. The river was studded with boats used to ferry men to and fro and to convey ammunition as required. On the other side of the river the ground gently inclined upwards, and here in strong positions were placed their Hotchkiss and other guns. The enemy's position was, as far as I, a non-combatant, could judge, an ideal one in every respect; but not a man of us knew, as far as I am aware, what a veritable hornets' nest we had got into. Several old campaigners here remarked that our Intelligence Department was greatly to blame, as we had no information either of the strength of the position or the strength of the enemy, who greatly outnumbered us. One and all agree that the presence of a military balloon might have brought about different tactics, with a much less loss of life on our side.

Taking everything into consideration, our 420 dead and wounded, which was the cost of our day's work, was miraculously small. Everything was against us; we had to attack an immensely strong and entrenched position held by a vastly superior force while advancing ourselves across an open plain. We had anticipated a brief and easy victory, and in consequence the men were not rationed, and the battle was fought and won by stomachs that had not seen food for twenty-four hours. Water was terribly scarce, and every water cart that came near the front had to beat a hasty retreat. The heat was terrific, and last, but by no means not least, our chief was put out of action very early in the day by a bullet wound. I learnt this in a curious manner. On the left of our line I saw a horse bolting riderless; it was evidently an officer's charger as there was a sword, &c., attached to the saddle. I sent a bugler to catch the horse, and found it had a Mauser bullet wound through the near fore shoulder and there was blood on the bridle, stirrup, and saddle. Drawing the sword, one read, "Methuen from Chapman." Fears at once arose that the general was wounded, and so, alas, he was, though luckily the wound was not serious.

Firing ceased about 1½ hours after sunset. Next morning at daybreak our guns opened fire, but a few shots sufficed to prove that the enemy had trekked during the night, and thousands must have made a midnight march. We ascertained later from prisoners that the enemy greatly feared a night attack with the bayonet. Hence this hurried retreat. They left all their artillery behind them, but shortly after midnight, discovering that we had not crossed the river, they returned and removed the guns to Spytfontein, where they are now encamped. What a chance we lost. Why, the reader may ask, did we not push home our attack at the close of the fight or shortly after? Because the men were so done up by the heat of the day, the fatigue of the long and hard day's fight, scarcity of water and want of food, that they were barely able to put one leg before the other.

Thus was lost one of the best chances we have had in this campaign of capturing the enemy's guns without loss of life. Next morning I went up and down the enemy's lines on both sides of the river, expecting to count the Boer dead by hundreds. After three hours' careful search I was able to count eighteen dead Boers and seventy-five horses, so that, unless they buried or carried away their dead, their loss would appear to have been marvellously small. With regard to their wounded, it is impossible at present to form even an estimate of their number.

There appears to be a certain class of men whose aim it is to under-estimate our losses and to grossly exaggerate the losses of the enemy—men who delight to start tales that stretcher-bearers and ambulance waggons are fired upon by the enemy, &c. I fail to understand their motives. Broad-minded soldiers must see that stretcher-bearers cannot help being shot. No Boers would purposely fire on a Red Cross party in my belief.

The Boer hospital here was struck by shell more than once, and all our ambulance waggons were struck by their missiles, a pure and unavoidable accident on both sides. I can myself give an instance in which the sick-berth steward of my ship was dressing a wounded marine; whilst the dressing was being put on the patient received a second bullet in the other leg, but with bullets dropping all round one it would be unfair to say that the Boers aimed at either the Red Cross or the wounded man. This particular incident occurred during our last battle at Graspan. The next morning we quietly marched into the town and occupied it. The day was spent in burying the dead. The field hospital was very crowded this morning, over 400 dead and wounded. The wounds produced by the Mauser bullets are all that could be desired, the entrance and exit are practically of the same size, and very minute. Most of the patients make an uninterrupted recovery. It is a much more humane bullet than our own Lee-Metford, for two reasons: its calibre is less and its velocity is considerably higher. I must have seen some thousand bullet wounds by now, including those I saw in the Filipino-American campaign. My experience, which is also based on some experiments I made this year at Wei-Hai-Wei, in the course of which I fired over 1,000 rounds of Remington brass-coated bullets and nickel-coated Lee-Metford, at all sorts of animate and inanimate objects, including their penetrating power upon various metals, a series of experiments I hope to publish later on. My experience has led me to the conclusion that those wounds which heal up most rapidly and give the least trouble are wounds produced by bullets having the same characteristics: (1) A very high velocity; (2) a flat trajectory, so that they hit apex first and do not keyhole; (3) a hard, smooth sheath with a smooth, rounded apex; (4) a close range, for the same reason as (2) a bullet at a long range may hit the object side on.

If I were to tabulate these missiles in the order in which the wounds produced by them were progressively more serious from above downwards, the table would read something as follows:—(1) Mauser; (2) Krag-Jorgensen; (3) Lee-Metford; (4) man-stopping Lee-Metford (hollow-headed nickel sheathed); (5) any of the first three with the nickel-sheaths around the apex removed so that the lead nucleus is exposed; (6) Dum Dum; (7) Remington brass-coated as used by the Filipinos; (8) Remington lead bullets or the Martini-Henry; (9) Remington brass bullet with brass sheathing removed so as to expose the lead nucleus; (10) shrapnel bullets; (11) shell or their fragments. Explosive bullets I have had no acquaintance with; it is said the Boers have used them, but I think this to be exceedingly doubtful.

Most thoughtful men will agree that the Boers have proved themselves to be brave men, and instances of a violation of the laws of civilised warfare are few and far between so far as my experience goes.

BARBED WIRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."
SIR,—With reference to the letter of Lieut.-Col. E. Gunter in your issue of Dec. 23, I know nothing of barbed wire entanglements, but for cutting through a barbed or plain wire fence there is nothing so good as an ordinary hatchet or tomahawk, one blow of which will sever the strained wire if struck against the post.

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards.—Capt. Holford, C.I.E., Equerry to the Prince of Wales, left England yesterday for South Africa in order to join the squadron on active service.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Surg.-Lieut.-Col. Forrester has been selected to take charge of the Princess Christian hospital train in South Africa, and proceeds there at once.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards.—Capt. Marter left England on Thursday in the Assaye for South Africa as Brigade-Major, 14th Brigade.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers).—Lieut. Till is reported as missing from the camp at Arundel. He is supposed to be a prisoner in the hands of the enemy.

7th Dragoon Guards.—Major Follett, who lately left the regiment on appointment to the 7th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, has rejoined for duty.

1st (Royal) Dragoons.—The reserve squadron left Hounslow on Thursday for Shorncliffe.

5th Lancers.—The Ladysmith correspondent of the Morning Post, in a heliographed despatch last week, says:—

"A single shot fired the other day from Bulwana Hill wounded Lieut.-Col. Fawcett, of the 5th Lancers, Major King, second in command and adjutant, two squadron officers, and a sergeant-major of the same regiment. Col. Fawcett lost a thumb and received a slight wound on each thigh; Major King only received a scratch, and the others came off equally well, except the sergeant-major, who lost an eye."

10th Hussars.—The condition of Lieut. the Hon. G. Portman, who has been seriously ill since his arrival in South Africa, has, we are glad to learn, shown signs of improvement during the last few days.

14th Hussars left Cape Town on Wednesday for Durban in the Victorian. The reserve squadron is stationed at the Curragh.

15th Hussars.—Capt. Anderson has retired in order to join the 3rd Batn. Cheshire Regiment.

16th Lancers.—Headquarters and the service troops left Umballa on Monday for Bombay en route to South Africa on active service. They were to have sailed yesterday.

17th Lancers.—Headquarters left Ballincollig on Monday for Aldershot, where they arrived on Tuesday and took over quarters in the cavalry barracks.

18th Hussars.—Lieut. Annesley has been appointed Adjutant to the local force in Natal being raised by Major Bethune, 16th Lancers.

20th Hussars.—In the South African Light Horse there are to be found side by side officers from the Army and Militia, youths from the public schools, English gentlemen with historic names, New Zealanders who have worked out their own passage to fight under the old flag, American muleteers, and, of course, Cape colonists and Transvaal refugees. It is typical of the ardour to see service that has seized upon all ranks that Capt. Vaughan, late of the regiment, hearing when at San Francisco that war had broken out, started at once for the Cape, and had no sooner landed than he was given a troop in the above regiment.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A and J Batteries R.H.A., at Meerut and Bangalore respectively, have been selected for service in South Africa.

The 19th and 28th Batteries R.F.A. arrived at Durban on Tuesday in the Atlantian.

The 83rd, 84th, and 85th Batteries R.F.A. will sail from Southampton on Tuesday in the Glengyle for South Africa.

Six batteries of Royal Field Artillery have been placed under orders to move to Aldershot in place of those under orders for South Africa. The 89th, 90th, and 91st will be quartered in Marlborough Lines, commanded by Lieut.-Col. W. B. Fletcher. Lieut.-Col. T. S. Baldock will command the 10th, 26th, and 92nd Batteries to be quartered in Wellington Lines.

No. 6 Company, Western Division, R.G.A. will move to-day from Dunbar to Leith.

The Committee on Garrison Artillery met at the War Office on Thursday.

Lady Reed, whose son, Capt. H. L. Reed, 7th Battery R.F.A., has been recommended for the Victoria Cross, writes:—

"I should be grateful to any friends of our Army in South Africa if they would kindly send me some gifts for the Royal Artillery serving in the Natal Field Force. I take a deep personal interest in this gallant corps who have so bravely done their part during this war, and I should like to be able to send them some addition to their very limited kit as well as a few luxuries. Flannel shirts, cardigans, cholera belts, knitted caps and socks, tobacco and pipes, cake chocolate, meat lozenges, or money to procure the same, will be most acceptable. Parcels may be addressed to Lady Reed, 23, Fitzwilliam-square, Dublin."

Lieut.-Col. H. V. Hunt is reported in an official telegram from Frere camp to be wounded and a prisoner, whilst in the first announcement he was said to be wounded only.

Lieut.-Col. H. H. Pengree, R.F.A., has been appointed to the command of a brigade division at Aldershot consisting of the 5th, 9th, and 17th Batteries R.F.A.

Cpts. H. M. Thomas and F. H. Metcalfe, R.F.A., have been selected for special service in South Africa.

Capt. P. T. C. Herbert, 87th Battery R.F.A., has been appointed Adjutant of the howitzer brigade division now mobilising at Woolwich.

Capt. A. F. S. Scott, R.G.A., has been granted a year's extension of his appointment as Adjutant of the 1st Lanark A.V.C.

Capt. H. L. Kirke, R.G.A., has been appointed acting Staff-Captain R.A., Scottish District.

Lieut. A. J. Thompson, R.G.A., has been selected for the Adjutancy of the Kent Artillery Militia.

PROMOTION.

Last Year FORTY-TWO OFFICERS PASSED, a large proportion of whom took "Special Certificates" and "Distinguished." This raises our total successes for this Examination to FIVE HUNDRED and SEVENTY-THREE. There has only been one failure in the past three years.

Work will be resumed in all Departments on Tuesday, January 9th.

Coldstream Guards.—The body of the late Major the Marquis of Winchester, who fell at the battle of Magersfontein, which is now on its way home from South Africa, will be received on arrival at Southampton by a detachment and the band of the regiment, and will be conveyed to Ampthorp House, the family seat near Andover, where the interment will take place. The funeral will be a military one, and nearly all the officers of the Brigade of Guards who are in England will attend. The service will be read by the Rev. Edgar Sheppard, sub-dean of the Chapel Royal, and the musical arrangements will be carried out by Mr. J. M. Rogan. Capt. Benson, 3rd Batn., left England on Wednesday for South Africa with drafts for the 1st and 2nd Batns. in place of Major Maxse, D.S.O., who has gone out on special service.

Royal Scots (1st).—Major McLachlan, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months on medical certificate.

Queen's (2nd).—Lieut. Tringham, 2nd Batn., was slightly wounded at Ladysmith on the 26th ult., when a shell fell in the mess tent of the 2nd Batn. Devonshire Regiment.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Brevet Lieut.-Cols. Sitwell and Henry, who went out to South Africa on special service, have been ordered to join the 2nd Batn. for duty.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—The 2nd Bntn. left Southampton on Thursday in the Assaye for South Africa.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—The 2nd Batn. left Southampton on Thursday in the Goorkha for South Africa. Lieut.-Col. Roberts has been granted an extension of command for 12 months from Feb. 12. Capt. Barlow, 1st Batn. has been selected for employment in Uganda. Lieut. Grant has gone out as Adjutant, Lieut. Stringer having left for the Cape some time.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—One of the Boer shells at Ladysmith fell the other day in the officers' mess of the 1st Batn., killing Lieut. Dalzel instantaneously and wounding seven other officers. Lieut.-Col. Park has desired the correspondent of the Daily Chronicle to "make known his grief at the loss of a valued comrade, and his heartfelt sympathy with the relatives of the deceased." The officers wounded were Lieut. Price-Dent (since dead) and 2nd Lieut. Twiss. In a descriptive letter from Ladysmith the special correspondent of the Daily News says:—

"The 1st Batn. Devonshire Regiment which, as one of the best here, and trusted for its steadiness in all circumstances, was given the most vulnerable point to hold, has busied itself in the formation of works that promise to make Helpmakaar Hill impregnable, though its long low spur is exposed to artillery fire from Bulwaan and Lombard's Kop, and the scrub-screened nek between them. The works there showed what can be done under difficulties by a good regiment toiling cheerfully to carry out the orders of good officers. The original breastworks were traced by engineers, who had in view rather the necessity of throwing up light defences against rifle fire than the probability that these works would be battered at by heavy artillery from one side and taken in reverse from another. It soon became evident that the entrenchments if left in that state would be untenable, and yet they could not be abandoned without serious risk that Boers might then be able to advance under cover near enough to threaten other posts, if not to command by rifle fire within 1,200 yd. or so, the heights on which naval guns are mounted. To the gallant Devonshire men was entrusted the trying duty of sticking generally to the lines traced by engineers for their outer defences, but deepening the trenches, widened the banks in front of them, building bomb-proof traverses overlaid with balks and earth to neutralise the effects of enfilading fire, and then to form for themselves dug-out huts in which to sleep, with solid earth roofs supported on railway sleepers. All this means enormous labour, carried on frequently under a galling cannonade from the enemy's smaller guns, and interrupted occasionally by the necessity of having to keep down the rifle fire that comes from a distant kopje while standing on the front of these works. But to Col. Park's splendid battalion nothing is impossible in the way of hard work and soldierly devotion. Capt. Warwick has resigned his appointment with the British Central Africa Rifles in order to join the 2nd Batn. in South Africa.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Dover yesterday for Guernsey and Alderney, where it will arrive to-day and relieve the 1st Batn. Worcestershire Regiment.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. Garraway, 2nd Batn., has been appointed officiating D.A.A.G., Poona, for eight months, vice Capt. McWhinnie, Royal Irish Rifles, granted leave to England.

FIRST-CLASS CERTIFICATES.—N.C.O.'s and men at home and abroad can be prepared by post for the half-yearly exams. Classes are now forming for March, 1900. Special attention is given to men who cannot attend an army school.—Randall J. Fox (ex-Army Schoolmaster), 368, Acton Lane, London, W.

EXAMS. Important to Examination Candidates PELMA'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY TRAINING. The Editor of "Great Thoughts" writes:—"The system appeals to all suffering from weak or defective memory; it is almost indispensable to examination candidates and to the student of languages." Taught by correspondence, the system in no way interferes with other studies. Easily and quickly learned. Prospectus post free.—Address, THE SECRETARY, SCHOOL OF MEMORY TRAINING, 70B, Berners Street, London, W.

Yorkshire Regiment (19th).—Capt. Nicholson, 2nd Batn., has been appointed officiating staff officer for mobilisation at India Army headquarters.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—The 2nd Batn. left Southampton on Thursday in the Braemar Castle for South Africa. Capt. Gosset has vacated his appointment as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Gosset at Dublin in order to accompany the 2nd Batn. on service.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—The 2nd Batn. will sail from Southampton on Wednesday next in the Bavarian for South Africa. Lieut. Bradley has been appointed Adjutant of the 2nd Batn.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—The 1st Batn. left Southampton on Thursday for South Africa, headquarters in the Goorkha, and 10 officers and 395 men in the Braemar Castle.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Lieut. Byrne was slightly wounded at Ladysmith on the 26th ult., when a shell fell in the mess tent of the 2nd Batn. Devonshire Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Best, who was wounded in action at Colenso on the 15th inst., has returned to duty.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th) left Guernsey and Alderney yesterday for Aldershot, where it will arrive to-day.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th) will leave Southampton to-morrow in the Britannic for South Africa. The men have received numerous gifts from the county. A fund raised at Preston by the mayor realised sufficient for the presentation to each man of half-a-guinea, while a committee of ladies have provided the men with woollen jackets, caps, socks, and mufflers in addition to tobacco and pipes. The Corporation of Jersey have also, as a token of the good feeling existing in the island towards the battalion, sent each man 1lb. of tobacco and a pipe.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (33rd).—Major Marshall has been appointed Commandant of the West African Regiment.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd).—Capt. Hall, 3rd Batn., has been appointed Acting A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Abadie, C.B., at Colchester.

Essex Regiment (44th).—Capt. Carleton, D.A.A.G., Chester, left England on Thursday for South Africa in the Braemar Castle as Brigade-Major 15th Brigade.

Loyal North Lancashire Regiment (47th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave England on Friday next for Malta, at which station it has volunteered to do duty.

Royal West Kent Regiment (50th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Chatham on Thursday for the Royal Albert Docks, and there embarked in the Golconda for conveyance to Malta, where it has volunteered to do duty. It had a most enthusiastic send off. The battalion is in splendid condition under Col. Bonhote.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Capt. Douglas-Pennant, 4th Batn., has taken up the duties of Acting D.A.A.G., Cork, vice Capt. Oxley, appointed Brigade-Major 12th Brigade, South African Field Force. The lads of the 1st Cadet Batn., whose headquarters are at 2, Finsbury-square, have sent £100 to the Rifleman's Aid Society, for the widows and orphans of their regiment, thus setting an excellent example.

Gloucestershire Regiment (61st) left Liverpool on Monday in the Cymric for South Africa. Capt. Whylock does not now take up the Adjutancy of the 1st Volunteer Batn., for which he was recently selected, but has embarked with headquarters.

York and Lancaster Regiment (65th) arrived at Durban on Tuesday in the Majestic from England.

Hampshire Regiment (67th).—The colours were sent to Winchester on Monday to be kept in safe custody by the mayor. They were escorted by a guard of honour of 100 men and the band and drums.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (76th).—The command becomes vacant in consequence of Lieut.-Col. Belfield's appointment as A.A.G. 7th Division in South Africa. Major Trench, now second in command of the battalion, will be promoted to the Lieutenant-Colonelcy.

Middlesex Regiment (77th) arrived at Durban on Tuesday in the Mongolian.

Royal Irish Fusiliers (87th).—An Army Order announces that the Queen has been graciously pleased to approve of the Princess Victoria's (Royal Irish Fusiliers) being permitted to adopt and inscribe on its colours the motto, "Faugh-a-Ballagh."

North Staffordshire Regiment (98th) will sail from Southampton on Wednesday next in the Bavarian for South Africa.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—Capt. Venour, who has vacated his appointment in the Egyptian Army, has been ordered to join headquarters in South Africa.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (103rd).—Capt. Shewan, who was wounded in the action at Colenso on Dec. 15, returns to duty.

Durham Light Infantry (106th).—Major Ross has left India for South Africa as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Hector MacDonald, C.B.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (108th).—Lieut.-Col. Greenfield, on appointment as A.A.G. in India, has been posted to the Madras Command.

Army Service Corps.—Nos. 12, 17, and 34 Companies left Southampton on Thursday in the Braemar Castle for South Africa.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—A circular has been issued stating that compounders of medicine are urgently required for service with the corps in South Africa. The conditions of enlistment are for a year or until the end of the war; the pay 3s. 6d. a day, free rations, kit, and passage, and a gratuity of two months' pay. Applications should be made to the recruiting staff officers at London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, or Edinburgh. A telegram from Orange River says:—

"Major Burtchall, R.A.M.C., captured under a flag of truce for carrying a revolver, was released after being tried by Gen. Cronje, whose wife was present during the proceedings. President Steyn had given orders that none of the Army Medical staff or of the Red Cross bearers were to be taken prisoners."

NOMENCLATURE OF OUR BATTALIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE." SIR,—Now that so large a portion of our infantry is serving together in the field, has not the time arrived when in the interest of simplicity, both as regards administration and command, in addition to their territorial titles, the old numbers should be restored to our battalions? That fine brigade of the 5th Division, the 11th Brigade, consists of the 2nd Batn. King's Own (Royal Lancaster Regiment), 2nd Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers, 1st Batn. the Prince of Wales's Volunteers (South Lancashire Regiment), and the 1st Batn. York and Lancaster Regiment. Which designations are the simpler of the two and the less likely to cause confusion in camp or field, the above or 4th Foot, 20th Fusiliers, 40th Foot, and 65th Foot is hardly a matter for argument. Most of our battalions cherish in their hearts the memory of the old number, and still hope that the day may come when, like the British flag said to be buried at Pretoria, it may rise again. In the arduous struggle that is before us neither officers nor men would fight the worse under their old number, reminding them as it does so directly of the glorious history of the past.

Cannes. LIGHT DIVISION. P.S.—Since the above was written I have read the following: "Gen. Sir Redvers Buller wires to the Secretary of State for War: 'Referring to my telegram regarding the engagement at Colenso, the battalion of infantry which occupied Colenso Station should be Royal West Surrey, not the East Surrey Regiment.'" Comment is needless.

THE FRANCO-GERMAN WAR.

Major-Gen. F. J. Maurice has edited and in part translated from the German this ponderous and imposing book, his collaborators being Capt. Wilfred J. Long and Mr. A. Sonnenschein (Swan Sonnenschein and Co.). The work appeared in Germany to meet a popular demand at the time of the Imperial celebrations, and was produced in a manner that did great credit to the German press, the illustrations, which we believe are all reproduced in the English edition, being of very great excellence. Although popular in character, the book is serious in purpose, and is in its measure an adequate treatment of the war from the German standpoint. The work belongs to a whole series of volumes which have now been issued by various publishers in the Fatherland to foster the Imperial idea. The writers all took part in the war, or were intimately concerned with it, and know well what they are writing about. Gen. von Boguslawski, for example, deals with the armies and the war material, Gen. von Kretschman with several of the battles, and that well-known soldier, Gen. and Marshal Baron von der Goltz Pasha, with the events of St. Privat and Metz. The other writers are scarcely less distinguished, and include Gen. von Holleben, Gen. von Heinleth, Col. Cardinal von Widdern, and Capt. Stenzel, author of the section dealing with the British Navy in the series known as the "Heere und Flotten der Gegenwart." We need scarcely say that in such hands the work has been well done, and though profound students of the war will find in the book little that is new to them, it will not fail to interest, and will certainly serve to revive the memories of those who remember the war, and to inform those who do not. It is important to observe that the book steers clear of controversy in nearly every case, and that the heated arguments which have from time to time stirred the German Service press in relation to the general staff history are scarcely reflected in its pages. The political aspect of the war has been confided to Dr. Julius von Pfugk-Harttung, who is Keeper of the Royal Archives in the Secret State Department. His view of the origin of the conflict, of course, throws all the onus upon France. Gen. Maurice corrects him in relation to the notorious Ems incident, and adopts the view put forward in Bismarck's "Recollections" rather than that suggested by Dr. Moritz Busch, the ingenious private secretary and wire-puller of the press. The Prussian Government is thus represented as having had nothing really to do with the Hohenzollern candidature, and it was the mad fury of the populace of Paris that compelled M. de Gramont to demand through M. Benedetti that the candidature should be renounced à tout jamais. The war was thus, according to the Keeper of the Archives, forced upon Germany without her seeking, and against her will. It is perhaps unnecessary to say that this view will not commend itself to all students of the period. Space is altogether wanting to deal with the chapters which are concerned with the military operations of the campaign, and we must be content to repeat that they are good and adequate, even if they are not always quite dispassionate. The book should find many readers in England.

The appreciation of a pen-and-ink sketch of the Maharajah of Patiala by "Jehu Junior" in this week's number of Vanity Fair is a little discounted, so to speak, by the humorous and slightly ridiculous sketch in colour by "A. R." of the distinguished ruler of the friendly state in the Punjab, of which his predecessor as ruler rendered invaluable service—"saving service" as Lord Canning called it—in the time of the Mutiny by keeping the way open through his territories for the troops who were sent down from the Punjab and the North-West to fight at Delhi. Our contemporary describes him as generous and a good friend, a keen fighter on the field, on the polo ground, in the very first flight as a pig-sticker, a fearless and accomplished horseman, a good cricketer, with a polo team, a cricket team, and an enormous stable of racehorses. We cannot accept his riding trousers as English or his elastic head-dress as Sikh, and would have sooner seen the premier prince of the Punjab and the head of the Sikh nation as Solomon in all his glory when he appears at a grand durbar.

Several of the magazines contain articles on the war in South Africa. Blackwood has an interesting account of the movements of our forces, and the march of Lord Methuen's column is examined in detail by a writer who seems to have paid particular attention to the intention to move up to Kimberley by the western route. Crossing the Orange River was, he says, carefully concealed from the public until the relief column arrived at the Orange River Station on Nov. 8. The article makes the amende for the omission of the 1st Royal Irish Fusiliers from the accounts of the storming of Talana Hill, and ends with an appeal to the officers who are entrusted with command for greater consideration. They are asked to remember that the soldier is a man like themselves. The writer has probably witnessed some of the fighting he describes so well. He asks a question to which there can be only one answer, "Have we not tried night fighting a little too often?" The article on British policy in South Africa takes the Imperial view of the question in a concentrated form, and shuts out everything else.

We are grateful for the Pall Mall Magazine, which gives its readers an article "On the Military Heroes" whose bones repose in Westminster Abbey, with illustrations of the monuments from photographs. There is a curious sketch of a Boer interior drawn from the life by one who was a little too near the subject to make his outline agreeable. Mynbeer du Plessis, whose house and family are described from the life, appears to have been a rough Huguenot "dopper" of the "sword of the Lord and Gideon" type of Boers, in whom Freiherr von Elft found nothing sympathetic or agreeable. Our ignorance of the nature of these men has probably brought about some of our trouble in the Transvaal, for we cannot understand why they hate us so bitterly, or put ourselves in their place as a chosen people of God, persecuted and hunted by Amalekites and Canaanites who are taking their heritage and their independence.

A VETERAN'S VIEW OF THE WAR.

[FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.]

My old friend Major von Blutwitz and I made acquaintance as long ago as November, 1863. The date was about a fortnight before the battle of Fredericksburg, and the scene of our rencontre was a muddy ravine wherein the major with a rather scratch pack of cosmopolite ragamuffins, styling themselves so many companies of New York infantry, were on outpost duty. A good many things have happened since then; most of those that have happened to the major have been more of a military than a lucrative sort. Wounded, and invalided from Burnside's army, he turned up again in time for the finish in front of Richmond. He was with Garibaldi at Mentana, and again at Dijon in 1870. So keen was the old soldier of fortune that he could not refrain from taking a hand in various South American presidential contests, and his last exploit was in command of a band of Servian irregulars whom he vainly endeavoured to bring into some sort of fighting array during the war with Bulgaria. Now he lives retired on a very small competence and nurses his old wounds in a cottage near Hastings. "I'll interview the old fellow," thought I, "about our scrape in South Africa. Like Marshal Saxe's mule he has abundant campaigning experience; perhaps he may be able to bring some of it to bear on our present difficulty."

"Herr Gott," said the major after greetings had passed, "you want my opinion. Opinion! I have no opinion at present, I have nothing but amazement. There is no room for anything else in all my mind so long as I watch your proceedings. See here, it is well understood that you start in this war under great difficulties. So far you deserve allowance, but here at once comes the inconceivable—for mark you it is also well understood that you had, to begin with, a reasonable plan of campaign. That plan was, as I conceive, to operate from Port Elizabeth and East London, so as to secure the line Rosmead-Stormberg as an advanced base, and thence march in overwhelming force on Bloemfontein as your first objective. General White was to do his best with his relatively mobile division and fair quantity of cavalry to defend Natal south of the Tugela. If too hard pressed he was to fall back and entrench himself with abundant resources at or near Pietermaritzburg, and you relied on the general advance against the southern frontier of your enemy speedily to remove the pressure from Natal. Well, my friend, I take my map—I look. I call that a reasonable plan; but Potztausend! what could I think when so long ago as September I see White push with his Indian contingent right up to Ladysmith and Dundee into the most dangerous corner of a most difficult country, far away from all possible support, to occupy positions exposing both his flanks to the enemy's frontier—no communication with his base at Durban, but the one long line of railway and a deep and rapid river in his rear. Something new, think I; for sure the English have found out something fresh; some, in strategy, as yet untried device. Good! we have seen. Where is your device? Whyfor does White himself in Ladysmith let shut up? Why not at least send out his cavalry before the investment is complete? The slow-moving enemy seemed to me to give plenty of time.

"Well, there is White. He becomes a magnet. To disengage him, like a loadstone he draws half your army; he draws your naval guns, your sailors, battalion on battalion and brigade on brigade, and your commander-in-chief, and you are no nearer relieving him now that you stare vainly at the Tugela than if your men and your commander-in-chief were where they ought to be, at Stormberg and Rosmead or over the Orange River. As for your plan of campaign, it is gone to the devil away in the ewigkeit; the disposal of your forces in the theatre of war looks like the accidental arrangement of the balls after a few minutes of pyramid pool. Not content with your magnet at Ladysmith, you must start another 300 miles off at Kimberley, and there Methuen plays the identical part of iron filings to the loadstone, which after all he cannot touch for the impregnable barrier interposed to his gallant but insufficient column. Meantime your enemy rides up and down the Cape Colony not greatly incommoded by the weak and disconnected forces of French and Gatacre, which represent, I suppose, the great force which was to march irresistibly on Bloemfontein. For your strategy then, I say, you have done everything your enemy can most have desired. He prefers to see you operating on exterior lines; rigorously you have adhered to them. He wishes you not in his own country; carefully you have not only kept out of it, but out of any chance of getting into it for a long time to come, for you can do nothing effectual until you shall have complete control of the central railways.

"Then as to your tactics. Ach Himmel! I weep. Was ever so much valour, so much loyalty, so much true soldierly spirit and daring so wasted? My dear friend, in all matters hitherto connected with this most strange campaign, it seems to me you have done what you should not do, and left undone what you should do."

"Then we are in a bad way. Do you think we shall be licked?"

"Licked? You! Never no more than the Yankees were licked after losing 20,000 men at Fredericksburg. You are having a little schooling, a little punishment for neglecting the great science of war in its theory and in its application. You have in the manhood of your nation and your colonies resources you never dreamed of. They will not fail you now, but you will have to pay dearly for allowing politicians anxious about diamond mines and coal fields to suggest to soldiers such movements as those on Ladysmith and Kimberley. That soldiers originated them I will never believe."

"Endlich," said the major after a few puffs at his long pipe, "to me this war do seem for you a blessing in disguise. Reflect! What sort of a figure would you have cut had this difficulty have coincided with some easily imagined complication with a great power? Then indeed, my friend, should you, as you say, have learnt what it means to wake up too late. Now the ring at your bell does come in good time. For the trouble that now befalls you is mostly due to the fact that no War Minister, but at loss of his portfolio, could have demanded the real placing of your military machine in order. Now will the nation itself enforce it, for the lessons this struggle shall teach not easily will be forgotten. Wherefore let the British Empire address herself to the task.

"'VORWÄRTS' be the word then. In body and in soul you shall come out far stronger than you went in."

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1900.

THE NAVAL YEAR.

OVERSHADOWING, as it must, everything connected with the Empire, it would be surprising if our usual summary of the year from a naval point of view were not tinged and coloured by the war in South Africa. The prevailing tint of veldt and kopje is, as we are told by both Mrs. Lionel Phillips and Miss Schreiner, a dull red, and characteristically any recital of the performances of the Navy in the second Boer War must have a sombre tone. Involved as we are in a difficult war, and with a task before us which puts a severe strain upon the resources of our Army, the fact that the fleet is in a condition to guarantee the safety of our troops in their passage to the scene of action, and to offer a strong front to any who might be inclined to interfere, is entirely satisfactory. If the war has no other effect at the moment, it has at least impressed upon the mind of the public the value of the Navy from an Imperial standpoint, and taught the nation a lesson in this respect which should make it ready for further sacrifices if needful to ensure a continued command of the sea. So far also as the actual participation of the Navy and marines in the events and incidents of the war is concerned, there is much which is a subject of congratulation. As the special correspondent of the Times in Natal remarks, the situation at Ladysmith was saved by the guns which Captain Lambton, of the Powerful, took to the front; and it was due to the ingenuity and readiness of resource of Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, that the naval guns were adapted for this purpose. Since then many similar guns mounted on Captain Scott's design have been sent to the front, and there can be no question of the immense value that they have proved both in the Cape Colony and Natal in neutralising the effect of the heavy ordnance which the Boers were able to bring to bear by means of their railway communication with Pretoria and Bloemfontein. Where also our bluejackets and marines have come in contact with the enemy, especially in the affair at Enslin or Graspan, they have fully sustained the traditions of the Navy for gallantry, dash, and discipline. We have so lately referred to the discussions which have arisen in connection with the employment of naval brigades at the Cape that it is unnecessary to recur to the subject. The emergency is sufficient explanation, if explanation is needed; it is, however, necessary in a naval retrospect to give in some detail the circumstances of the various landings. The first brigade sent on shore was that landed from the ships at Simon's Bay on October 20, consisting of the marines of the Doris, Powerful, Terrible, and Monarch, with two long 12pr. naval guns mounted as field pieces and manned by bluejackets of the Doris and Powerful, a stretcher party of stokers being also furnished by the various ships. This party, under the command of the late Commander Ethelstone, of the Powerful, proceeded to De Aar, and thence to Stormberg, whence after a short stay it retired to Queenstown. From the latter place it was recalled, via East London, to Simon's Town, with the exception of the marines of the Terrible, who were ordered to rejoin their ship at Durban. On returning to Simon's Town on November 19, it was reinforced by a further detachment of seamen and marines who had recently arrived from England in the transport Briton, and the whole brigade, under the command of Captain Prothero, of the Doris, was despatched to join Lord Methuen's force advancing to the relief of Kimberley. Several additional long twelves, and a couple of 4.7in. guns, all of which were mounted upon carriages constructed from the design of Captain Percy Scott, and a searchlight, also adapted for land service by the same officer, accompanied the brigade. It was this brigade which took part in the actions at Belmont, Graspan, Modder River, and Magersfontein. At Belmont the naval guns came into action rather late in the day, but were instrumental in effecting the complete dispersal of the Boer marksmen, who from their hitherto impregnable position in the kopjes had been successfully checking the advance of the British infantry regiments. At Graspan the honours of the day fell almost entirely to the naval brigade, who on this occasion had been given the post of danger, and were used as infantry. Out of a total of 365 officers and men, there were no less than 105 casualties, the brigade having to mourn the loss of a large proportion of officers and men, while many more were wounded. At Modder River, and again at Magersfontein, the guns of the naval brigade again came into action, and since the date of that battle they have been continuously employed in shelling with lyddite the enemy's position. In Natal the honour of being first in the field from the fleet rests with the Powerful. This ship, it will be remembered, was on her way home from China when her course was diverted to the Cape. From the moment when he got his orders at Singapore up to the moment when, on October 30, he brought his guns in the nick of time to Ladysmith, Captain Lambton's energy and foresight have been most conspicuous. From Mauritius he brought over half a battalion of the King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry, and it is a happy coincidence that when the seamen and marines were in a tight place at Graspan it was these very men who came to their assistance. On his arrival at Durban Captain Lambton's quick grasp of the situation was again apparent. The brigade which accompanied him to Ladysmith carried also four long twelves and two 4.7in. guns mounted on the special carriages designed by Captain Percy Scott. With this party also went two engineer officers, two engine-room artificers, and sixty stokers, with an equipment of tools and material for mounting and repairing heavy guns. The sixty stokers, in addition to being of use for the repair of smashed gun carriages, or for assistance in gun mounting, also formed ammunition and stretcher parties, and it is only just that we should remind the public that under the generic title of bluejacket the stoker, as well as the seaman, is participating in the arduous and dangerous work to be found at the front, both in Natal and Cape Colony. In connection with the fortunate arrival of the Powerful's brigade at Ladysmith we have to record the lamentable death of her gunnery lieutenant, the late Commander Egerton, who struck down by a Boer shell, succumbed to his injuries. Although the Powerful and Terrible and their captains loom large in the story of the naval action in the war, all the other vessels have participated. With the Terrible, which relieved the Powerful at Durban, are the Philomel, Tartar, and other ships, all having men in the field with guns. They occupy various points in the lines of communication between Durban and Chieveley, and have done a large amount of useful work as well as garrisoning Durban. Moreover, some of them have, in addition, been occupied off the Portuguese coast in stopping vessels with contraband of war and treasure. The naval brigade in Natal consists of twenty-six officers and men, Captain Jones, of the Forte, being in command at the front, and Captain Scott, of the Terrible, at the base. There are also eighteen long twelves and two or more 4.7in. guns on Captain Scott's carriages on shore. Turning to the general administration of the Navy, perhaps the most striking feature in connection with the provision of material is the large number of vessels which have been launched, and which are still lying uncompleted in the public and private yards. We have before remarked upon the danger of having a large number of vessels in various stages of construction, a condition of affairs which was very characteristic of naval shipbuilding prior to 1887, and one that we trust we shall not see again. There may be reasons of which we are not aware which explain the apparent dilatoriness in forwarding naval work at the private establishments, and it would be more satisfactory if a continuance of that policy which made the speedy completion of ships a cardinal point were more obvious. During the year nineteen vessels have been put into the water, and thirty-two new ones have been begun. Of course, many of these are small, but the Implacable, London, Bulwark, and Venerable are battleships of the first class. Indeed, the six vessels of the Formidable class have all now been launched, and the materials for two battleships of the Duncan type having been delivered at Chatham and Devonport, the places vacated there have been filled with as little delay as possible. The Duncan class, it will be remembered, is of slightly less displacement than the Formidable, but with similar armament and increased speed. Six of the vessels of this type are in hand, two at the Thames Ironworks Company, to be named the Duncan and Cornwallis, the Exmouth at Laird's at Birkenhead, and the Russell at Palmer's on the Tyne. With the Montagu and Albemarle they will form an unquestionably powerful squadron, possessing excellent fighting qualities. These two classes of ships, with the five vessels of the Canopus type which are still in hand, form the seventeen battleships which are returned as "building" in the parliamentary paper issued this week. The Ocean and Goliath, with machinery by Hawthorne and Penn respectively, should follow the Canopus fairly soon, but the Albion, Glory, and Vengeance are still somewhat behind-hand, judging from the length of time since they appeared in the estimates. The next most important batch of vessels are the armoured cruisers, of which fourteen are mentioned in the return as "building." The six vessels of the Cressy class have not made the progress that could have been wished, and the others in hand are the Drake, King Alfred, Leviathan, Good Hope, Bedford, Monmouth, Kent, and Essex. It is stated, but we have not seen it confirmed, that in the case of some of the later battleships and armoured cruisers, although the armour and machinery have been ordered, but little progress has been made, and contracts have yet to be entered into for the provision of armament. According also to another rumour, the Admiralty have been obliged in the case of one firm to undertake the completion of their contracts themselves. Of vessels other than those mentioned above there are now nine building or completing, including the two Pandoras. Thirty-three torpedo-boat destroyers are in hand, but many of these are in a forward state; there are also two torpedo-boats which will shortly be begun by Messrs. Thornycroft.

The increase in the various grades of officers, which side by side with that of the men has been a feature of the estimates for some years past, continues, and during the past year there has been no great difficulty in the supply. It is probable that it will not again be necessary to add to the supplemental list of lieutenants to meet the requirements of the fleet. With regard to the training of officers and men, the substitution of modern vessels for the masted ships lately forming the Training Squadron has reopened the whole question. The discussion in the press has shown a wide divergence of opinion on the subject, and there is much to be said for the demand which has been made for a committee to reinvestigate the whole subject. A boon long desired and deserved has been granted by the extension of full-pay leave on return from foreign service so that it may include all classes of commissioned and warrant officers. The rules in connection with sick leave have also been most properly extended. It is curious in this connection to note that very nearly all the complaints made some time since in connection with an agitation by naval officers have now received attention at the hands of the authorities. The system, too, under which officers of the executive branch reckon their service while on full pay for the purposes of promotion, retirement, &c., has been simplified by new regulations, which have been made retrospective for the financial year. Many changes have taken place both at the Admiralty Board and in the commands of squadrons abroad. On the retirement of Sir Frederick Richards, Lord Walter Kerr became the First Sea Lord, Sir Frederick Bedford having been previously appointed Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indies Station. He succeeded Sir John Fisher, who relieved Sir John Hopkins in command of the Mediterranean Squadron in July. The post of Second Sea Lord was filled by Admiral A. L. Douglas, who in his turn was relieved as Commander-in-Chief on the East Indies Station by Rear-Admiral D. H. Bosanquet. Another appointment of importance at the Admiralty was that of Admiral Custance as Director of Naval Intelligence, Admiral L. A. Beaumont, who had filled that post, succeeding Admiral Palliser in command of the Pacific Squadron. An incident of some importance was the bursting of a boiler tube on board the Terrible during a run home from the Mediterranean, a mishap which caused the death of one man and injuries to several others. A court of inquiry followed, which attributed the accident to the tubes being welded instead of solid drawn. A discussion upon the value of water-tube boilers was reopened in consequence of this disaster, but the general consensus of opinion appeared to be largely in favour of this class of boiler, at all events for naval purposes. Another discussion of the year concerned the position of the engineers, but no steps have been taken to accede to the wishes of this class of officers, and the outcome of the change which has been brought about in the United States Navy does not appear likely to influence the authorities to make changes in the direction desired. As a result of the Peace Conference held at The Hague in May, June, and July, a convention was signed by the principal Powers for the adaptation for naval warfare of the principles of the Geneva Convention of 1864.

Navy Notes.

The New Year promotions, duly announced on the 1st inst., have doubtless excited as much interest as usual, the war notwithstanding. Ten commanders, nineteen lieutenants, and twenty-six sub-lieutenants are advanced a step in rank, the proportion of lieutenants being slightly smaller than usual, though the regulations would have allowed the Admiralty a larger selection from the lieutenants' list. The authorised additions to the higher ranks of the Navy are being made so gradually that the full effect of the new Orders in Council have scarcely as yet made themselves felt, and this, of course, is a serious matter for the senior lieutenants. On the other hand, there is a slight but quite perceptible decline in the length of service of the lieutenants selected for promotion, whilst none of the newly-promoted captains has served more than 6½ years on the commanders' list. So long as the fleet can be supplied with an adequate number of executive officers it is doubtless wise to increase the senior lists gradually, thus avoiding such blocks in promotion as have wrecked the prospects of scores of capable men in the past. The satisfactory increase of junior executives, due to the large entries of cadets, will at least tend to avert the wholesale admission of officers from the merchant service, unless the strain of a maritime war should force the hand of the authorities.

Of the ten commanders advanced to the captains' list, the senior, Captain Morris H. Smyth, joined the Navy in 1867 and has thirty-three years' service. Captain Smyth is an experienced surveyor, now in command of the Egeria, and is forty-six years of age. Captain George H. Hewett, commanding the Raccoon, is two years younger, whilst three others, Captains Sackville H. Carden, R. H. Farquhar, and F. St. L. Luscombe are forty-three years of age. Five of the new captains are consequently too old to stand any real chance of further advancement on the active list in the ordinary course of service. The promotion of Captain Carden will be encouraging to officers who have made a speciality of navigation, and it is worth noting that he is promoted from a battleship which also carries a commander for executive duties. The officers in this batch who are young enough in point of age to expect to reach the active flag list are: Captains Edmund Slade (forty-one), Thomas B. S. Adair (thirty-nine), George E. Patey (forty), and Julian C. A. Wilkinson (forty). Captain Richard B. Farquhar, now in his forty-second year, may also, perhaps, reach the flag list. The ten new captains are one and all officers who have made their mark in the fleet, either by war service, constant service afloat, or by passing brilliant examinations in early life. Captain Slade was specially promoted lieutenant for obtaining first classes in all subjects, and so too was Captain Lewis Bayly, whilst Captain G. Patey is one of our best gunnery men, formerly on the senior staff of the Excellent.

The length of service of the nineteen lieutenants selected for promotion varies between 15½ and 10½ years. Commander A. A. Lucas, the senior officer of the batch, is thirty-nine years of age, whilst Commander Thomas D. L. Sheppard, the junior selected, is fully six years younger. Between these two officers age and length of service varies much as usual, the average service as lieutenant working out at slightly under 12½ years. Six of the officers were gunnery men, only two torpedo lieutenants, five are specialists in navigation, and the remaining six are non-specialists. The selection of so many as five executive navigators is rather noteworthy, especially as compared with the number of torpedo lieutenants advanced in this batch. The executive navigator has, perhaps, better prospects of promotion to-day than the non-specialist, although there must always be a decided majority of non-specialist lieutenants on the list. Commander Bowles, now in his thirty-eighth year, has been unlucky in being detained 14½ years on the lieutenants' list, seeing that he is a gunnery officer with a good examination record behind him. These selections will undoubtedly give as much satisfaction in the fleet as promotions under the selection system can be expected to do, unless, indeed, exception be taken to the proportion of navigators advanced.

Letters from Hong Kong state that the Orlando has returned there from a month's cruise to Japan. On the voyage from Kobe to Nagasaki she made the outside passage, instead of going through the Inland Sea, to admit of gunnery practice being carried out. On November 21, with a view to completing the prize firing with machine guns, the steam cutter was being hoisted out, when it capsized alongside the ship and foundered, Mr. C. Varyl Robinson, midshipman, and five men who were in the boat being thrown into the water. Lifebuoys were promptly let go, two lifeboats were lowered, and the officer and three men were rescued, Robert J. Halls, an able seaman, and James Harding, a stoker, being unfortunately drowned. The Orlando cruised about over the spot for more than an hour, but without result, and she then resumed her voyage to Hong Kong.

The mishap to the new Royal yacht is, we may hope, not so serious as was at first reported. She has been successfully undocked after having been partially righted by placing ballast in her bottom. It was stated in the account originally published that she had met with an accident on the first attempt to float her, but, of course, this was inaccurate as she was first floated at her launch. What appears to have really happened is that when water had been admitted to the dock something occurred which prevented a sufficient supply to enable her to be water-borne, and the vessel therefore fell over on one side, her port bilge resting on the keel blocks. Doubtless considerable damage has been done, and the strains to the ship and her machinery must have been very great. It is not necessary, however, as has been hastily assumed in some quarters, that the vessel can never entirely recover her original shape unless rebuilt. If the mechanical science at the disposal of the Admiralty were not competent to meet this emergency we should be very much astonished indeed. The navigating party had already been despatched to conduct her trials when the mishap occurred, and these were to have taken place, the first between Pembroke and Plymouth for forty-eight hours at two-fifths her power, the second of similar duration at four-fifths power in the Channel and finishing at Plymouth, and the final trial for eight hours at full power was to finish at Portsmouth, where the yacht will be completed.

The council of the South-Eastern College, Ramsgate, with a view to assisting the widows and families of officers who lose their lives in South Africa, have decided to admit their sons at greatly reduced fees. Lord Wolseley is a member of the council, and has signified his personal approval of the course proposed by writing through his private secretary: "I am to say that Lord Wolseley is very much pleased to know of this action, and most thoroughly approves of so patriotic a move. He hopes that its result will be to benefit not only the individuals concerned, but the Army and the country."

Naval Personal.

H.R.H. the Duke of York makes Sandringham his headquarters during the present month.

Rear-Admiral Burges Watson's nomination to succeed Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd as Admiral-Superintendent at Malta is undoubtedly a disappointment to the flag officers senior to him who are expecting employment, but it is at the same time a judicious selection for such an important post. His recent services at Pembroke Dockyard were most probably an inducement to the Admiralty for selecting him, and it is a decided advantage sending him to a place where activity and ability are most important factors as administrator of our largest foreign arsenal.

Rear-Admiral H. L. Pearson, Commander-in-Chief of the Australian Station, arrived at Hobart, Tasmania, on Saturday last.

Rear-Admiral L. A. Beaumont, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Station, left Magdalena Bay in the Warspite on Saturday last for Acapulco, accompanied by the Leander, Icarus, and Pheasant.

Rear-Admiral R. N. Custance and Captain H. T. Grenfell, who respectively commanded the Barfleur and Royal Sovereign during the Cretan insurrection, have each been awarded C.M.G. for their services during that troublesome period, and well deserve the honour conferred on them.

Commodore E. S. Poë's cruiser squadron is to be utilised for training purposes as well as being a fighting unit of our fleet, the Admiralty having directed that the vessels under his orders are to receive officers, young seamen, and stokers for instruction the same as obtained in the squadron of masted ships, and the usual periodical changes of ranks and ratings are to be carried out as heretofore.

Captain Leslie Stuart, of the Tauranga, and Captain F. C. D. Sturdee, late of the Porpoise, from which vessel he was promoted to his present rank in June last, have been awarded C.M.G.'s for the exceptionally hard work that fell to them during the recent troubles in Samoa. The latter officer bore the brunt of the complicated situation that obtained at those islands for a considerable time until relieved by Captain Stuart, and showed that he possessed ability in diplomacy as well as skill as a gunnery officer.

Captain J. L. Hammet's promotion to Rear-Admiral places him on the junior flag list nearly five months before attaining the age of fifty-two, thereby assuring his retention thereon until 1913. With his varied experience and success as captain, he will undoubtedly have a good share of employment as flag officer.

Captain C. J. Barlow, Captain-Superintendent of Pembroke Dockyard, has been awarded the Good Service Pension vacant by the promotion of Captain J. L. Hammet to flag rank. Captain Barlow saw considerable service with the naval brigade in Burma, 1885-86, and got through a very large amount of hard work, which resulted in early promotion to his present rank.

Captains F. O. Pike, of the Minerva, and F. E. Brock, of the Highflyer, were detached on Monday from the training squadron of cruisers at Gibraltar for a week's cruise in the Mediterranean.

Captain G. F. King-Hall takes command of the Revenge when Captain C. J. Briggs vacates the appointment on Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel striking his flag.

Captain R. B. Farquhar, of the Nymphe, left Malta on Tuesday last for England to pay off. He was given his present rank from the 31st ult. in the recent batch of promotions.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, of the Europa, embarks a new crew for the Ramillies on Saturday next, and leaves the following Monday or Tuesday for the Mediterranean.

Captain H. F. S. Niblett, of the Diadem, arrived at the Nore on Saturday last from Las Palmas, having been relieved at that port by Captain R. K. McAlpine, of the Cambrian.

Captain George Neville, of the Dido, conveyed Major-General Lord Kitchener from Malta to Gibraltar last week in forty-six hours. As the distance covered is 990 miles the average speed per hour was 17.73 knots.

Captain William Wilson, of the Anson, arrived early on Friday in last week at Devonport from Gibraltar to pay off that battleship.

Captain Frank Finnis, of the Amphion, left St. Vincent, Cape Verde Island, on Tuesday last to pay off that cruiser.

Captain E. P. Jones, of the Forte, commanding the naval brigade at the front near Colenso, has a force of 340 seamen and Royal Marines, with two 4.7in. and fourteen long-range 12pr. guns, who will undoubtedly render a good account when the forward movement takes place.

A memorial tablet is to be placed in the church of Peak Forest, South Wales, in remembrance of Commander F. G. Egerton, who was killed in action at Ladysmith November 2 last.

Commander E. J. Bain, of the Imogene, pays off that vessel at Lemnos, the Tyne having left Malta with a new crew for her on Saturday last.

Lieut. - Commander R. F. Ayseough, of the Ringdove, who we previously announced was sent to the outlying islands of New Zealand, Auckland, Campbell, Antipodes, &c., to examine the store of provisions and necessities left there for shipwrecked crews, found the articles intact and in good condition. Exceptionally heavy weather, usual in such latitudes, was not encountered.

Lieutenant G. R. A. Gaunt, who served with Captain F. C. D. Sturdee in the Porpoise, and materially aided the operations at Samoa in getting native levies into fighting shape, will, it is hoped, receive ere long official recognition of the good service he rendered under unusual circumstances.

Lieutenant W. L. Williams - Mason, recently promoted from the Rupert, arrived at Plymouth from Port Said in the P. and O. steamship Britannia on Sunday last.

Midshipman C. A. E. Huddart, whose recent death at Graspan we all deplore, although comparatively a youth, displayed the noble attributes of his race while under fire. An officer states "that at the bottom of the hill Mr. Huddart was hit in the arm, and half-way up the ascent he was shot in the leg, but still pressed on. On reaching the kopje he was shot through the stomach and fell mortally wounded." The Admiralty have similarly written to his bereaved father, who in his grief has the satisfaction of knowing how his gallant son maintained the glorious traditions of Her Majesty's Navy.

Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel Townley W. Dowding, R.M.L.I., supplementary half-pay list, should, in the vacancy arising by the death of Colonel F. V. G. Bird, Commandant, revert to the establishment as Colonel-Second-Commandant; but if he obtains promotion, he will probably be seconded and continue the duties of Inspector of Royal Marine Recruiting, which he has most ably carried out during the past two years.

Captain R. L. Bayliff, R.M.L.I., embarks in the Europa to command the Royal Marine forces for recommissioning the Ramillies, and returns to England with the detachments paid off from that battleship.

Captain J. B. Pym, R.M.L.I., has embarked in the Australia in place of Captain H. E. Blumberg, R.M.L.I., who completed two years' service afloat on the 29th ult.

Captain G. H. J. Mullins, R.M.L.I., of the Terrible, who was landed for service in South Africa and immediately afterwards re-embarked, appears to have returned to duty on shore with a naval brigade.

Lieutenant S. P. Musson, R.M.L.I., has been allowed to join the Indian Staff Corps.

Lieutenants F. J. Cartwright and C. F. Barber, R.M.L.I., become Assistant-Instructors of Gunnery at the Portsmouth and Chatham headquarters respectively, in place of Captains T. H. Hawkins and H. M. Howard, R.M.L.I., recently promoted to that rank.

NAVAL STRENGTH OF THE POWERS.

A parliamentary paper has just been issued showing the fleets of Great Britain, France, Russia, Germany, Italy, the United States of America, and Japan, distinguishing the various types of vessels built and building. The return shows the date of launch, the displacement, and the armaments reduced to one common scale. The last time the return was issued was in May, 1898. Vessels which appeared on Oct. 15, 1899, in the official list of each Navy as built or building are enumerated, including under the latter head those for which on that date money had been appropriated and which were shortly to be laid down. The following tables exhibit the total number of vessels in each class belonging to each nation:—

France has three submarine boats built and nine building. No other Power has any vessels of this class either built or building.

A branch of the Navy League has recently been formed at Dover College. The following gentlemen form the first committee: The Rev. W. C. Compton, M.A., head master, and B. F. Hall, V. P. Jackson, A. M. Pooley, J. H. Foster, J. W. Simmons, D. F. Mackenzie, and R. J. C. Garrett.

An afternoon concert will take place at the Grosvenor Club, Bond-street, on Tuesday, 16th inst., in aid of the Daily Telegraph War Fund, and will be applied to the relief of the families of officers. Many distinguished artists have promised their assistance. The charge for admission will be one guinea, and the general public may purchase tickets at Messrs. Mitchell's, 33, Old Bond-street. It is hoped that £1,000 will thus be raised.

HORSE SICKNESS, PINK EYE, INFLUENZA, &c.—To prevent horse sickness Colonial Farmers, Kaffirs, and Boers always rub a little tar or Eucalyptus oil in the nostrils of the horse when he is out on the Veldt; vide "Daily Mail," Nov. 29th, 1899. Byard's Eucalyptus Citriodora being an absolutely pure oil, put up in the smallest compass, is admirably suited for this purpose, and may be purchased at the Army and Navy Stores, or of any chemist.

M. Waldeck-Rousseau summoned together last week for the second time the French Ministers of War, the Navy, the Colonies, and Foreign Affairs, to take into consideration the question of French national defence. The result of the conference is not fully known, but the shipbuilding programme for the fleet was discussed, and the proposals of the Minister, based upon the indications of the Superior Council of the Navy, were adopted. We believe that this programme provides for the building of twelve large ships and of many destroyers, and it will presumably override the wishes of the Budget Committee. The cost involved is 450,000,000f. The programme will be submitted to the Chamber upon its assembly next week. The Agence Havas denies the rumour which has been spread that a special loan is contemplated.

Vice-Admiral Tyrtoff, commanding the Russian forces in the Black Sea, has addressed to Vice-Admiral Fournier a letter which may be interesting in relation to the Franco-Russian Alliance. He says that the visit of the French naval officers to Sebastopol was too short, but will never be forgotten, and the French Commander-in-Chief has replied in terms not less enthusiastic. The Minister of Marine in Paris has also addressed to Admiral Fournier a despatch, which has been communicated to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in which he alludes to the warm reception offered by the Russian authorities to the officers who went to Sebastopol, and alludes in general terms to the satisfaction which has been given by the cruise in the eastern Mediterranean.

Mr. Long, Secretary of the United States Navy, has decided that San Juan, Porto Rico, Havana, and Cavite, in the Philippines, are to take rank as naval stations and to be fitted with everything that is necessary for the requirements of the fleet. Each of them will have the same organisation as the New York Yard, and will be under a captain-superintendent. There appears at present to be no intention of retaining the old Spanish station at Subig Bay, although Admiral Dewey and some other members of the Philippine Commission hold that it is incomparably better situated than Cavite, and it is not at all unlikely that this opinion may yet determine the department to change its plans. A civil engineer is to report upon the facilities presented by Subig Bay for the creation of a dock, and upon the best position for a coaling station in Manila Bay.

We learn from the Army and Navy Journal of New York that the official and personal correspondence which Admiral Cervera received permission from the Spanish Government to publish as a defence of his conduct in the Spanish-American War has been translated under the direction of Commander Richardson Clover, Chief Intelligence Officer, U.S.N., and been published by the Naval Intelligence Office. Many of the telegrams have already been published, especially those in which the admiral set forth the helplessness of the ships of the Spanish Navy in comparison with those of America. Of the Viscaya, which had been the pride of the Navy, he said on April 24, 1898, that on account of her foul bottom she was "no better than a buoy." He spoke despairingly of the task of going to the West Indies, and repeatedly informed the Government that the squadron was going to defeat and destruction. He deferred his sortie from Santiago in the belief that Admiral Schley had started to carry out his orders to blockade there. May 26, seven days after arrival, was decided on for escape, but a storm arose, and departure was postponed, despite the protests of his chief of staff and the captain of the Maria Teresa. On June 8 the Spanish admiral convened the captains of his squadron to discuss the situation. Captain Concas, of the Maria Teresa, was of the opinion that in case the Brooklyn or New York should at any time disappear the sortie should be attempted immediately. This view the admiral repeated in a telegram to the Minister of Marine. Then the admiral spoke of the hopelessness of counting on darkness as an aid in escape, as the American ships did such effective work with search-lights. There is a note approaching despair in the communication of June 25 to General Linares, in which he says, "It is for the Captain-General to decide whether I am to go out to suicide, dragging along with me those 2,000 sons of Spain."

In his report upon the battle of Santiago to Captain-General Blanco, Admiral Cervera thus referred to the preliminary action of the flagship: "As soon as the Teresa went out, at 9.35, she opened fire on the nearest hostile ship, but shaped her course straight for the Brooklyn, which was to the south-west, for it was of the utmost importance to us to place this ship in a condition where she could not be able to make use of her superior speed." In his report Captain Eulate, of the Viscaya, says: "At 11.50, when we could no longer fire with a single gun, I wanted to try whether we could ram the Brooklyn, which was the ship that harassed us most on the port side, and which was nearest to us. To that end I put to port, but the Brooklyn did the same, indicating that she was going to use only her guns." The dispute among the Spaniards as to who determined that the attempt to escape would be made would seem to be settled by the correspondence, which shows that the original suggestion came from Blanco on June 22, in these words contained in a telegram to General Linares: "It is my opinion that Cervera should go out from Santiago as early as possible." Cervera was too good a sailor to accept the advice of a landsman, so he declined to make the attempt unless ordered by Marshal Blanco. Further correspondence resulting in the refusal of Admiral Cervera to take such desperate chances except under positive orders, Blanco set the case by cable before the Madrid Government. There Blanco's view was adopted. The crews, which had been sent ashore to assist in the land defence, were re-embarked on July 2, and the next day the ships put out.

NAVY.

Admiral Sir F. Nicolson.—Admiral Sir Frederick Nicolson, who died on the 29th ult., aged 84, was the son of Major-Gen. Sir William Nicolson, the ninth baronet, by the daughter of Mr. John Russell, granddaughter of Robertson, the historian. Sir Frederick entered the Navy in 1829, became Lieutenant in 1837, Commander in 1841, Captain in 1846, Rear-Admiral in 1863, Vice-Admiral in 1870, and Admiral seven years after. He was formerly Chairman of the Thames Conservancy Board. The deceased Admiral was made C.B. in 1859.

Capt. C. F. Newland.—Capt. Charles Frankland Newland, retired, died at Midhurst on the 27th ult., aged 89 years. He became Naval Cadet, 1824; Sub-Lieutenant, 1831; Lieutenant, 1838; Commander, 1847; and retired, 1864, with the rank of Captain. As Lieutenant he saw considerable active service in China; was senior Lieutenant of the Spiroful in the operations against the Sultan of Borneo, 1846. In the Isis on the same station he conducted an expedition up the river Brune for the capture of the Sultan, but after much exploration both by water and inland he failed to secure that individual. His only service as Commander was in the Coastguard at Falmouth, 1853-59.

Col. F. V. G. Bird, R.M.L.I.—Col. Frederic Vincent Godfrey Bird, Commandant of the Chatham Division B.M.L.I., died on the 29th ult. at Chatham of paralysis at the age of 57. He joined the Royal Marines as a 2nd Lieutenant in 1860, was made 1st Lieutenant in 1863, Captain in 1877, Major in 1882, Lieutenant-Colonel in 1889, Colonel 2nd Commandant in 1895, and Colonel in 1897. He served in the battalion of Royal Marines sent to South Africa for special service in the Zulu War of 1879. As Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Royal Marines he served from August, 1893, to May, 1897, and he received the Jubilee commemoration medal. He was granted the Good Service Pension of £120 per annum only the day before he was seized with his fatal illness, and in the ordinary course of promotion he would have become Major-General in February next. The funeral took place on Tuesday last in the local cemetery. Admiral Sir N. Bowden-Smith, Rear-Admiral S. C. Holland, Major-Gen. T. Fraser, commanding the garrison, the captains of Her Majesty's ships at the port, the colonels-commandant of the Royal Marine forces, and many officers of both Services attended to pay the last marks of respect to one whose ability as an officer and genial and gentlemanly treatment of everyone won the esteem of those who had the good fortune of serving under his command, as well as those with whom he was brought in contact either officially or socially.

Insp.-Gen. G. W. L. Harrison.—Insp.-Gen. of Hospitals Garland William Langdon Harrison, retired, died at Newton Abbot on the 30th ult., aged 62. He became Surgeon, 1858; Staff-Surgeon, 1870; Fleet-Surgeon, 1880; Deputy Inspector-General, 1890; and retired, 1893, with a step in rank. His last active service was at the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth, 1890-93.

Deputy Insp.-Gen. R. Hay.—Deputy Insp.-Gen. of Hospitals Robert Hay, of the Royal Naval Hospital, Bermuda, died at that establishment on the 2nd ult., aged 58, having been invalided a few days beforehand. ANNEXING THE TRANSVAAL.—What will be the fate of the Transvaal after the war it is difficult to foresee, but one thing may be considered certain, and that is that everyone who can will take care to annex a case of that delicious liqueur, Grant's Morella Cherry Brandy, which is so great a favourite at home and abroad. Sold everywhere, also Grant's Cherry Whisky.

DEATH.

O'CONNOR.—On Dec. 28, at No. 1, Victoria-road, Barnstable, Mass., the beloved wife of Col. Charles O'Connor, late Commissariat and Transport Staff, R.I.P.

A RETIRED OFFICER, inventor of several explosives and also a movable machine for the purpose of making on the field high explosives, including lyddite, intends to proceed to South Africa. Inventor requires CO-OPERATION of two or three GENTLEMEN, preferably officers, who will proceed with him to South Africa, and who will also obtain an interest in the patents on terms to be arranged. The new machine greatly simplifies the production of high explosives for military and mining purposes, and enables the manufacture to be carried out with great safety on the spot, thereby avoiding the danger and enormous cost of transit. — Apply at once, 614, Army and Navy Gazette Office, 3, York Street, Covent Garden, London, W.O.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING

BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

Report.

"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch, No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the Discovery, and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactorily, — M.D., D.I.H., R.N."

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

EXCEPT in one important direction the news from South Africa has during the past week been of a singularly jejune and generally uninteresting character. The isolated instance to the contrary is that of Ladysmith, which on Saturday last underwent a decidedly hard experience, and, it is pleasant to add, emerged from it very creditably. Evidently beginning to find their position between Ladysmith and Chieveley a little doubtful, in view of the large reinforcements which have been steadily pouring in upon Sir Redvers Buller, the enemy projected the design of carrying Ladysmith by assault, and on Saturday proceeded to put that design into execution with singular vigour and determination. The main objective chosen was Caesar's Camp, the most advanced post held by the British garrison. It lies about three miles south of the town, and is of great tactical importance as it guards a long ridge running up at the back of it to the town, the possession of which ridge would give the enemy a serious advantage indeed, practically rendering speedy reduction of the garrison by bombardment and otherwise inevitable. The camp was held by the 1st Batn. Manchester Regiment and 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, with the 1st and 2nd Batns. King's Royal Rifles on a ridge to the east close by. The attack was pushed with "the greatest courage and energy," and must have succeeded if it had not been met by splendidly dogged resistance. The Boers are said to have advanced three times, and on one occasion to have got up so close to our entrenchments that the men of the Manchester Regiment and Gordon Highlanders actually repulsed them with the bayonet. Some of the entrenchments on Wagon Hill were lost and retaken three times during this desperate day's fighting, and one point in our position was occupied by the enemy the whole day, but in the evening, during a heavy rain-storm, was regained at the bayonet's point by the 1st Batn. Devonshire Regiment. It was not until 7.30 p.m. that the fighting ceased and the British force was able to feel that it had succeeded in maintaining its position. Meanwhile Sir Redvers Buller, who had been in heliographic communication with Sir George White, had sent all his available troops to make a demonstration towards Colenso. It is possible that this influenced to some extent the day's proceedings, but it is clear that it would have been of very little real moment if Sir George White's men had not held their ground and met every attack with unflinching tenacity. To the latter belongs the credit of inflicting upon the enemy what, in the circumstances, is a serious blow, a repetition of which, we should say, they are not likely to court, at any rate in the immediate future, and the present effects of which may seriously assist General Buller's advance, which is understood to be in progress as we go to press.

For some days past there has been no news from Sir William Gatacre, but it is fairly certain that he is now advantageously placed for resisting any attack such as that on the police camp between Molteno and Cyphergat on the 3rd inst., of which additional details are to hand. From these it appears that the presence of a second British battery and a few mounted men would have converted an insignificant affair into a substantial success. From General French we have now received full particulars of the counter-attack made by the enemy on the British left flank, three miles north of Colesberg, on the 4th inst. Some smart cavalry and horse artillery work was done, and the Inniskilling Dragoons contributed a fine charge to the "programme." Very much less satisfactory was an incident which occurred on the early morning of the 6th to the 1st Batn. Suffolk Regiment, a half-battalion of which had been detailed the previous evening to occupy a minor position near Rensburg. An official statement since issued says that Lieut.-Colonel Watson, commanding the battalion, "marched his force in close column to the top of the hill which he intended to hold. On arriving there he assembled his officers, and was addressing them at daybreak when the enemy poured in a volley at only thirty paces distance. The colonel, the adjutant, and two other officers were killed; the Suffolks had scarcely fired a shot. The rear fled back to the pickets, 1,000yd. away, someone having shouted 'retire.' About 150 men, with seven officers, remained. They lost heavily, and were compelled to surrender." Such is Reuter's account based on an official statement, and it is not pleasant reading. The honour of the regiment concerned seems to have been duly upheld, and in the face of the fact that Colonel Watson, a gallant and experienced soldier, has lost his life it may appear ungracious to apply harsh criticism to a mishap which was possibly accentuated by the word "retire" having been shouted as a ruse by the enemy. But the gross ineptitude of the whole proceeding, as it appears from the account quoted, is too glaringly apparent to be passed over without comment. That a force should have approached in such formation within a stone's throw of the enemy, without seemingly taking any precautions whatever against surprise, is a marvel accentuated by the fact that Colonel Watson had passed through the Staff College and might reasonably be expected not to have committed a blunder for which a Sandhurst cadet would be gravely blamed. Since this painful misadventure General French has been mainly occupied in reconnaissances and in threatening the enemy's communications to the north. At Modder River, too, a state of continued inaction has existed owing, no doubt, to the reported ill-health of Lord Methuen.

Such is the condition of things to-day. It is scarcely one on which the Army can congratulate itself. It may be that the onus of responsibility will be relieved by the ultimate success of measures which have been forced upon the Government and the War Office as the result of their admitted incapacity to grapple with the situation as it existed four months ago. But if genuine justice is to be done, nothing in the future will effectually obscure the delinquencies of the past, the cynical indifference to grave warnings, the peddling attempts to minimise obvious difficulties, the perverse efforts to secure public approbation by showy projects of reform, while all the time the best interests of the Army were being subordinated to ideas now proved to be practically unsound. In truth the spectacle at the present moment is not a pleasant one so far as it affects that department, in which its present leaders have assured us that their own reforms—in the introduction of which they have been given a freer hand than was probably ever given to a British War Minister or Commander-in-Chief before—have wrought such a radical change. Apart from politics the apologia of Mr. Balfour is about as damaging an indictment of our military system as could well be formulated. Nor can we stop here. The thinly-disguised official anxiety to obscure the issue as regards our artillery which is evidenced in certain letters on the subject printed in the Times is proof enough that there is perturbation in Pall-mall, and that the forthcoming session is being looked forward to with very mixed feelings. As the Times suggests in a leading article, the tone of which is one of very significant and powerful rebuke, "thick-and-thin supporters of certain principles are very much needed just now." Few more inconvenient reminders have ever been produced than the leading journal's allusion on Thursday to the fact that the original offers of contingents from the colonies were met with the official reply, "unmounted men preferred"! Governments, not to speak of high individual officials, have in the past resigned when brought face to face with such damning proof of their mental aberration as that.

Army Notes.

The interest in the war becomes daily more absorbing. Despite a rigorous censorship, the events that are transpiring at the front are flashed to us while they are yet in progress, and, thanks to the telegraph, the whole theatre of operations seems to lie open to the eyes of the observer although 6,000 miles separate him from the actors in the strife. By common consent this war is declared to be, in its character and developments, one without a precedent sui generis. It is a war in which an army of mounted riflemen, assisted by powerful artillery, is pitted against a mixed force organised on the European system, and in which the bulk consists of foot soldiers. Of the developments of the campaign none have been more interesting or more instructive than the night assault and the frontal attack. By both of these summary methods the Boers were successfully assailed by our troops on many occasions during the early weeks, and driven from their selected positions. At Willow Grange on November 23 a hill strongly held was carried in the darkness at the point of the bayonet after an arduous and skilfully-managed night march. Success was complete, and the British camp at Estcourt was relieved of the enemy's presence in its vicinity. At Ladysmith on two occasions the Boers were driven from positions at night and some of their powerful guns destroyed. The defenders of Mafeking in a night sortie entered the enemy's trenches, which were drawing inconveniently close to the place, and cleared them with the bayonet. The conditions precedent for success in night attacks are absolute secrecy, so that the enemy shall be taken by surprise, and trustworthy guides well acquainted with the ground. Where these are wanting failure is the result, as was the case with General Gatacre's column at Stormberg, and Lord Methuen's assault on Magersfontein, where the Highland Brigade marching in close column was decimated. A night attack, therefore, is an operation always attended with serious risk, and one that demands the highest qualities in a leader. But the commander who successfully carries out a night attack is well repaid for the risk run; the effect on his troops is in the highest degree inspiring, while that on the beaten foe is demoralising. Moreover, the loss sustained by the assailed is usually much heavier than that of the assailants. As the war proceeds we may expect to hear from time to time of more night operations in the various parts of the theatre of war. They are the direct outcome of the character of the foe, who is sedentary by night, mobile by day, an excellent shot when he can see his object, a master of the art of concealing himself and at escaping when worsted. The best way of neutralising those characteristics is to get at close quarters if possible under cover of night. The hardships to be undergone by the troops on such occasions are usually great, but the losses in killed and wounded are proportionately small.

The prospects of the frontal attack are by no means so encouraging. They have been delivered on several occasions with striking success since the war commenced, but the latest attempts have resulted in failure. This is not difficult to understand. We commenced the war with the fixed resolve in the breast of every British soldier to wipe the stain of Majuba from our tarnished escutcheon. Hence those heroic charges at Talana Hill, Elands Laagte, Belmont, and Enslin. On the other hand, the Boers entered on the campaign with the most supreme contempt for the British soldier, and was wondrously surprised to find in him a fighter superior to himself. With that knowledge, however, has come the end of the successful frontal attack if the enemy be given time to strengthen his position with entrenchments and other artificial means of defence. The losses of the troops in the successful frontal attacks referred to were severe, but less so than might have been expected, while the gain, besides the actual positions carried and the enemy's losses, has been immense. It is no less than the established superiority of the Briton over the Boer when pitted against each other man to man in the grip of close quarters, and the final combat hand to hand. The Boer has been reached more than once on his position with the bayonet, and in his retreat with the sword and lance, and, dreading these weapons, he will no longer stay to meet the British charge. Given a degree of mobility equal to that of the Boers, so that our troops can press their assaults home before the positions of the enemy can be fortified with entrenchments, and the frontal attack will retain its potency; but in order that losses may be minimised and the full fruits of victory reaped, the frontal attack should be accompanied by turning movements round the enemy's flank or flanks, threatening his line of retreat. An excellent example of such an operation has been furnished by the raid of Lieut.-Colonel Pilcher's mobile column from the neighbourhood of Belmont to Douglas, taking the rebel commando by surprise en route at Sunnyside forty-one miles from his base, gaining a victory, which although small in itself was complete, the enemy's laager being captured, and his losses considerable. This success was the direct result of a skilful combination of the frontal and flank attacks, carried out with a thoroughly mobile force and with the utmost secrecy. The active part taken by the Australians and Canadians in this exploit was most satisfactory, and has been keenly appreciated by the country and the Army.

Whatever may have gone wrong to Generals Gatacre and French credit is certainly due. Their activity and minor successes in the northern districts of Cape Colony have unquestionably relieved the tension of the suspense caused by the unavoidable inaction of the British commanders in Natal and on the western border. If their operations are subsidiary to those of the larger forces under Sir Redvers Buller and Lord Methuen, they are nevertheless both important in themselves, and eminently useful in the lessons they teach. Of these lessons, the chief one beyond all question is that the force possessing the greatest mobility has an overmastering advantage.

The recent attack on Ladysmith has brought home to the people of England, as no other event of the war has yet done, the desperate nature of the struggle in which we are engaged. Satisfaction at Sir George White's victory is shadowed by the uncertain future. That our men, weakened by disease, insufficient food, and discouragement, should have fought for seventeen hours against overwhelming numbers flushed with hope, and beaten them back three successive times, speaks well for their gallantry; but when we begin to think of the circumstances of that heroic little garrison our hearts are filled with foreboding. With nearly a day's continuous fighting Sir George White's stores of ammunition must have suffered to an alarming extent, and his losses in men, relatively small though they were, must tell on a force already weakened by disaster, sickness, and intermittent warfare. The Boer prisoners will be another strain on the resources of the camp, seeing that it is beginning to be familiar with half-rations. It is, strategically, anything but strong, and so ill adapted for defence that only for the naval guns brought up from Durban it would have been incapable of holding out at all. These things, together with the fact that it has been invested ten weeks, are not calculated to assure the public mind that Ladysmith will continue to make that gallant defence which is one of the brightest features of the war. With a foe so resourceful, so mobile, so quick to seize every opportunity, and so strong in numbers, the position will daily be growing more acute.

The Boers' action at Ladysmith was due to several causes, some of which will never be known, others may readily be guessed, even at this distance from the theatre of war. The desire of the Boers to take a place whose gallant resistance has checked all their designs on Natal must be very great. The desperate nature of the assault points to another reason. The enemy are beginning to realise that their strength is on the wane. The guard at Pretoria consists of small boys and old men; in the country the women, children, and natives are carrying on the work of the farms. It is, therefore, certain that all available men and lads above the age of thirteen years are at the front. Allowing that burgher losses have been made up by disloyal Dutch, a generous estimate, it follows as a matter of course that the members of the Boer Army are inexorably fixed. The question of horses must be pressing, and next month is likely to be more so.

The commissariat is so defective that the very necessities of life are often conspicuous by their absence. There is, however, another side to the picture. Three months of constant fighting have developed the soldierly qualities of the Boer forces until they have much of the spirit, discipline, and cohesion of a regular army. As though they had not won Majuba Hill in 1881, we were confidently told that they would not attack an entrenched position. Nevertheless they assaulted Ladysmith with the most determined courage, and though beaten back, returned to the attack again and yet again. This complete change of tactics on their part, so far as the present war is concerned, is disquieting because it may be repeated, for there is no doubt General Joubert is as well acquainted with the state of Ladysmith as General White himself, and he can bring up fresh men unshaken by defeat and as resolute as their predecessors to take the place. It is, however, more likely that the enemy will try to gain their end by investment, a slow process, which finds no favour with the younger Boers, who have little faith in General Joubert. They, as much as the necessity for doing something, and the state of Ladysmith, are responsible for the repulse of Saturday last.

Colonel Kekewich now remains the only British commander in South Africa who has had no misfortune. The disaster which has overtaken the Suffolk Regiment bears a strong resemblance to previous ones at Nicholson's Nek, Stormberg, and Magersfontein. Why our men should thus be overcome by Boer wiles is not quite clear, and it grows sadly monotonous. After so many bitter experiences the trick should be about played out or tried on the enemy by way of a change. In stratagems, clever devices, and resourcefulness we are as children compared to the Boers. The consequence is they continually surprise us with the unexpected; we play into their hands by doing exactly what they anticipate. A terrible instance was the battle of Magersfontein, detailed accounts of which have come to hand. Anything more melancholy can hardly be imagined. Hungry, tired, and drenched to the skin by a pitiless rain, the Highlanders fell into a trap which proved fatal to their nerve. They had no idea they were near the Boer trenches until the flashlight shone in their faces, and stunned by the shock, entangled in the barbed wire cunningly stretched in every direction, and demoralised by a withering fire, they fell back on hearing the word "retire," which was surely never uttered by English lips, leaving their brave general on the field and one in five of their number. They rallied again, but in half-hearted fashion, which had no effect on the fortunes of the day. Night attacks when they fail are disastrous, and Magersfontein was no exception. In a country where the very air carries news they are almost certain to be unsuccessful. One thing is almost certain; we shall gain less in this war by showy victories and frontal attacks than by raids such as Colonel Pilcher's and harassing the enemy's communications as General French is doing. We want stratagems as well as strategy, tricks as well as tactics.

The following letter from a gallant correspondent serving with Lord Methuen's force at Modder River fully bears out Colonel Hale's argument, and should have its effect in helping to silence those who are so ready to condemn the actions of commanders: "I suppose home critics will argue that our generals since this war began have made great sacrifices for very poor results, that their tactics have failed, and that they have forfeited the confidence of the public. Now I can only answer for what I have seen here. I can assure the critics, if such there be, who take this view that their line of argument is most unfair. There never was a general, I should say, who was really more thoughtful for the welfare of his men than Lord Methuen. He shows his interest in them in a hundred little ways. But Lord Methuen was in this sorry plight when he took the field. Kimberley had to be relieved. He was ordered to relieve it if possible, and relieve it he was determined to do if he could. In this object for the moment he has failed; but he would have been howled at by the very critics who doubtless are now condemning him if he had not made a vigorous effort to do something. Yet, poor man, he was completely outmatched from the start. It never seems to have entered into the minds of any of the home officials at the outset that the Boers are a mobile force, or that they were provided with far heavier and better guns than our own. The idea evidently was that all we required to do was to meet the Boers with a force of brave infantry soldiers, and that they would then lay down their arms. The brave soldiers we undoubtedly possess. The bravest infantrymen in the world, however, are powerless if unsupported, as we have been, by cavalry and artillery. It is so very easy to say, 'Oh, the tactics of the general have been bad.' In the present instance this excuse I trust will not be trotted out, for it would be grossly unjust. I say this the more readily as I do not know Lord Methuen personally. I am simply telling you what I know to be a fact, that he has done all that mortal man could have done with the materials at his command. Had he even had the benefit of common shell things might have been different. A battery of field artillery firing shrapnel against an enemy like the Boers, strongly entrenched as they have been in the last two engagements in which I have taken part, produces about as much real effect as some half-dozen fire engines would do. To send generals into the field to face a stubborn enemy, remarkable for mobility, occupying the strongest positions and in possession of more powerful artillery, and then to condemn those generals unheard because they have failed to do impossibilities, is a proceeding which will, I am sure, be repugnant to all fair-thinking Englishmen. Knowing how apt some are to jump at hasty conclusions I venture to hope if the usual course is adopted in this case you will allow me to say a word for our brave and popular general who might have been able to relieve Kimberley, if the materials he required for the accomplishment of the task had been at hand to have enabled him to meet the enemy on anything like equal terms. It is those who watch the game who see most of the play. Having been present in the two actions already fought by Lord Methuen, I may be allowed perhaps to know as well as the home critics where faults have really existed, and I say unhesitatingly that they have not been with our general, who has done his level best if ever man did."

Major-General Yule arrived home from South Africa on Saturday last in the Dunvegan Castle, and at once proceeded to London. When Sir Penn Symons fell mortally wounded on the field of action the command of the troops devolved upon Major-General Yule. There was an officer present in the engagement, it is true, who was as a colonel senior to General Yule, Colonel C. E. Beckett, C.B., General Symons's Assistant-Adjutant-General. Colonel Beckett, however, was wounded too in the course of the engagement, and is now a prisoner of war at Pretoria. But even if he had not been incapacitated his seniority would not have given him command, for the battle before Dundee was fought on October 20. On October 9 Colonel Yule was promoted a local Major-General in South Africa for the purposes of the campaign, so that although his brevet did not come to him until May, 1898, and Colonel Beckett was a Colonel of August, 1896, the junior, by virtue of his command, took precedence. General Yule's health broke down completely before he left Ladysmith, and even when at length it was decided to send him to England he was so weak that he could not leave Maritzburg for some time. The services he rendered by the heroic and well-planned retreat from Dundee to Ladysmith will live in military history as an achievement of no little importance.

The Militär-Wochenblatt in its criticisms of Sir Redvers Buller's reverse upon the Tugela confines itself to purely military considerations, and writes in a tone of moderation. It remarks that the action brought to a close an important period of the campaign so far as the Boers were concerned, and left them in a generally favourable situation. The semi-official organ recognises that the task before the Boers is from many points of view simpler than that which we have undertaken. They know the country well, they have an excellent intelligence service, they are accustomed to the climate, and are able to make much of their opportunities. The Wochenblatt adds that their military ability is illustrated by the ease with which they seem to withdraw their guns from threatened positions, to bring them up again, and to use them with effect, as also by their extreme mobility and the skill with which they plan and make their trenches. They show, moreover, independence and self-discipline. On the other hand, the Wochenblatt discovers that we make many errors. Our strategical mistakes find their counterpart in the tactical operations, and we proceed without proper reconnaissance, without taking the care to protect ourselves from flank attacks, and without recognising the tactical necessities imposed by the situation as it is presented in South Africa. The Wochenblatt concludes its article by quoting at some length from an English writer who has described the defects of our Army, and remarks that the picture given shows in the clearest possible way the qualitative difference between the British Army and the Boer commandoes.

These criticisms of the Wochenblatt are substantially those which are offered by most of the military papers of the Continent. Some of them profess to be absolutely unable to comprehend the utter carelessness and neglect of precautions which, despite our own drill books, we are alleged to have displayed. The Echo de l'Armée, which generally fills its columns with absurd vituperation, gives place to a reasonable article by M. Alfred Duquet, whose volumes upon the Franco-German War are well known. He remarks that the war proves, though there are eternal laws regulating the conduct of armies, that these laws cannot be held to be absolute, and that success or defeat must depend upon the ability of the commander to make the best use of time, locality, and men. He gives credit to General Joubert for possessing such soldierlike qualities, and says that it is because he and his associates took full account before the first gun was fired of the different hypotheses which would present themselves in case of conflict with England that they were not taken unaware and have done so well in the war. He regards it as having been a great error on the part of Sir Redvers Buller to divide his forces, since the consequence has been that our superb regiments have been overwhelmed, and he comes to the conclusion that the principles of the art of war, spoken of by Napoleon, Frederick, and Wellington, have been justified on one side of the Tugela but not upon the other. By this he means that rules are not to be blindly followed, and that the division of forces, which was wrong in us, was right on the part of the Boers.

Colonel de Villebois-Mareuil, the French officer who is with General Joubert, addressed a letter to a friend from Lorenzo Marques, which has found its way into the French press. He had been preceded, he says, by five German officers, but would endeavour to justify French military reputation. Incredible things were happening, and he took credit to himself for having divined the situation. His view is that Sir Redvers Buller's right plan would have been to concentrate on the Orange River to invade the Free State which was deprived of its defensive force, and aided by the lines from Cape Town to Bloemfontein and Kimberley, to crush the Orange Free Staters, and take Joubert in the rear if he persisted in his operations in Natal, or otherwise to force the Boer commandoes to retire upon Pretoria. Something like this was, of course, the original plan of campaign, from which unfortunate circumstances have turned us. The colonel concludes by saying that he is doing his best to serve France where he is, and that the business in hand is to tear the whole of South Africa from our empire. Quite correctly, he ends by saying that he has embarked upon an adventure.

That devoted little body of Militia officers who have been rendering such valuable service on the West Coast of Africa came in this week for well-deserved recognition. The C.M.G. is conferred upon Major A. F. Tarbet, 3rd Batn. South Lancashire Regiment, and Captains E. C. d'H. Fairtlough, D.S.O., 4th Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, and W. S. Sharpe, 4th Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, and the D.S.O. upon Captain H. G. de L. Ferguson, 4th Batn. Norfolk Regiment. We congratulate not only the officers themselves but the hitherto much underrated service to which they belong on this mark of favour. To those who know the splendid example they have set to all about them it must be a source of satisfaction to find that they have been honoured as they deserve to be, and we trust it will act as an encouragement to others in this moment of national emergency to know that at length the officers of the constitutional force are being regarded seriously. It has been too long the practice to depreciate the Militia, and we are now beginning, though late in the day, to recognise what folly it has been to allow this tried reserve to run to seed.

The Civil Service Commissioners announce that it has now been decided that the general regulations respecting open competitive examinations for situations in the Civil Service included in Schedule A of the Order in Council of June 4, 1870, shall be so modified as to allow members of the Militia, the Imperial Yeomanry, the Honourable Artillery Company, and the Volunteers, in reckoning age for competition, to deduct from their actual age all time spent on active service in connection with the war in South Africa.

The War Office has ordered that the Staff College, instead of reopening in the ordinary course after the Christmas vacation, is to remain closed until further orders.

It has been decided that the two companies of mounted infantry, 300 strong, required for the cavalry brigade now forming for South Africa shall be supplied by the line battalions stationed in Burma, these being the 2nd Batn. Duke of Wellington's Regiment at Rangoon, the 2nd Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment at Thayetmyo, the 2nd Batn. Essex Regiment at Shwebo, and the 2nd Batn. Durham Light Infantry at Mandalay.

An important step has been taken to secure efficient Militia stretcher-bearers, instructions having been given to the various Militia battalions embodied to select men in the proportion of two per company for special training. These men are to go to Aldershot for the course, which is to be given at the dépôt, Royal Army Medical Corps.

BRITISH AND BOERS.

The lectures at the Royal United Service Institution do not usually possess very much attraction for juveniles, but that delivered by Dr. Maguire at the institution on Thursday afternoon proved an exception to the rule. The subject had to do with the war in South Africa, and the address being intended specially for boys and girls the lecture theatre was well filled with ladies and children.

Dr. Maguire at the outset of his remarks characterised the situation in South Africa, not as the most interesting topic of the hour, but as the most interesting of all times. Our past relations with the Dutch and the part both nations had played in the world's history alone made it noteworthy, whilst the thousands of miles across sea that we had to transport our troops made the war unique in the history of campaigning. Sketching the story of South Africa since the end of the 17th century when the Dutch settled at the Cape with a view to having a port of call on the way to the East, he showed how after commencing by devoting their attention to agriculture they became nomadic fighters against the natives, and gradually developed into a nation of mounted infantry more mobile than France, Germany, or any other people, with the single exception of the Mongolians. Withal they were intolerant in their religious prejudices, corrupt, and cruel to the native population to a degree. Time and again the Kaffirs had appealed to this country to save them from the yoke of the Boers and place them under our own rule and protection. Too often, however, England had turned her back on the native, and by granting conventions to the Boers even gave them power to oppress her own subjects who had been drawn to the country by the discovery of the riches it possessed. The Uitlanders were taxed beyond all bounds, and attempts were at last made to redress their grievances. But the Boers would not hear reason, and at last brought matters to a climax by sending a ridiculous ultimatum to the Queen, telling us in effect to withdraw our troops from our own land and go home. So the war broke out. The extreme mobility of the Boers had given them an enormous advantage over us, but though things had not gone too well with us so far, he thought he saw the breaking of the clouds and the coming of sunshine.

After a series of lantern slides illustrating the lecture had been shown, the proceedings terminated by a vote of thanks to Dr. Maguire being passed on the motion of Sir George Chubb.

HORSE SICKNESS, PINK EYE, INFLUENZA, &c.—To prevent horse sickness Colonial Farmers, Kaffirs, and Boers always rub a little tar or Eucalyptus oil in the nostrils of the horse when he is out on the Veldt; vide "Daily Mail," Nov. 29th, 1899. Byard's Eucalyptus Citriodora being an absolutely pure oil, put up in the smallest compass, is admirably suited for this purpose, and may be purchased at the Army and Navy Stores, or of any chemist.

Army Personal.

The Duke of Connaught arrived at the North Wall, Dublin, at half-past seven on Tuesday morning to take up his new command. His Royal Highness, who was attended by Captain McNeill as Equerry and Captain Clayton, Scots Guards, A.D.C., was met by Major-General Gosset, commanding the Dublin District, and by several members of the headquarters and district staffs. Lord Athlumney, A.D.C., was present on behalf of the Lord Lieutenant. A guard of honour of the 4th Batn. Rifle Brigade was drawn up with the regimental band in the street outside the London and North-Western Company's station, and a mounted escort of the 1st Dragoon Guards. The Duke drove in an open carriage to the Viceregal Lodge, where he was received by the Lord Lieutenant. The arrival at the North Wall was witnessed by a crowd of people, who gave His Royal Highness a right loyal welcome. At a later hour in the day the Duke left the Viceregal Lodge and drove to the Royal Hospital, Kilmalsham, where he remained for some time in consultation with the heads of the staffs. His Royal Highness left the Phoenix Park at half-past two on Wednesday and accompanied the Lord Lieutenant to Dublin Castle, where he was sworn in as Commander of the Forces in Ireland and a member of the Privy Council.

General Sir Robert Biddulph will with the Queen's approval retain his position as Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Gibraltar for a further period of three months.

General J. T. Hill, Colonel of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, attained the age of eighty-nine on Wednesday.

Lieut.-General Sir William Stirling, R.A., has succeeded General Godfrey Clerk, C.B., as Lieutenant of the Tower of London.

Lieut.-General H. Le G. Geary, C.B., will preside at the Royal Artillery Institute, Woolwich, on Thursday next at five p.m., when Sir Robert Ball (Cambridge University) will lecture on "Weighing and Measuring the Celestial Bodies."

Mrs. Wauchope, widow of Major-General A. G. Wauchope, C.B., who fell at Magersfontein, desires it to be made known how much she appreciates the kind messages of sympathy she has received from all parts of the United Kingdom, and how sorry she is that she is quite unable to acknowledge them all personally.

Major-General Hector MacDonald, C.B., is expected to reach Cape Town on Tuesday next from Bombay to command the Highland Brigade. In a letter to friends in Aberdeen, General MacDonald says:—

"When you write just tell me what is thought at home of this war and what is thought of our generals and our soldiers, and let me ask you to remember that whatever you hear, and no matter what people say, our generals are all right, and our soldiers will pull this thing through, and right well too. Do not let anyone cast reflections on one or the other in your hearing."

We understand that the Secretary of State for War, in accordance with the powers vested in him, has requested the Chaplain-General to remain at his post during the present emergency. In ordinary circumstances Dr. Edghill would have retired on the 8th prox. on attaining the limit of age.

Colonel A. H. Wavell, A.A.G. for Recruiting at headquarters, takes over command of the 15th Brigade, South African Field Force, vacant by the death of Major-General J. E. H. Prior.

Colonel C. E. Swaine, C.B., half pay, late 11th Hussars, has taken up the duties of A.A.G. for cavalry at headquarters in the absence of Colonel Lord Erroll on active service.

Colonel Sir Thomas Holdich, R.E. will preside, at the Royal United Service Institution on Friday next at 3 p.m., when Major A. C. Yate, I.S.C., will read a paper entitled "Sixty Years of Frontier Warfare."

Colonel H. Elsdale, Commanding Royal Engineer at Hong Kong, attains the limit of age on Saturday next and will be placed on the retired list.

Colonel R. H. L. Curteis, half pay, late Bedfordshire Regiment, has been appointed Deputy Adjutant-General in Ireland, vice Colonel W. F. Kelly, C.B., on active service in South Africa.

Colonel W. A. Collings, half pay, lately commanding the 1st Batn. Royal Berkshire Regiment, has taken up the duties of A.A.G. South-Eastern District, vice Colonel F. W. Benson, proceeded on active service to South Africa.

Colonel H. C. Cholmondeley, London Rifle Brigade, will sail from Southampton to-day in the Union steamer Briton for South Africa in command of the mounted infantry of the City of London Imperial Volunteers. The Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs will journey down to Southampton to witness the embarkation.

Colonel W. Clark, commanding the 51st-65th Regimental District, Pontefract, attains the limit of age on Tuesday next and will be placed on the retired list.

Lieut.-Colonel F. C. Turner, on the retired list, who was for many years on the recruiting staff, has been recalled to service at the Recruiting Depot, St. George's Barracks, vice Major H. W. Rowden, 2nd Batn. Wiltshire Regiment, on active service.

Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. J. P. Napier, half pay, late 10th Hussars, has succeeded Colonel O. C. Hannay, who has gone to South Africa as A.A.G. Southern District.

Appointments of officers, Royal Engineers, made on the reorganisation of the Public Works Department in India: To the office of Director-General of Military Works, Simla, Lieut.-Colonel H. W. Duperier to be Deputy Director General. Majors J. G. Day and E. C. Stanton to be Assistant-Director-Generals. To be Commanding Engineers of Districts: In the Punjab—Lieut.-Colonels H. H. Hart and J. Kellie, and Majors J. E. Dickie, J. A. Turner, A. L. Mein, and W. W. Baker. In Bengal—Colonels A. Porcelli and E. Creswell; Lieut.-Colonels J. M. T. Badgeley, M. Martin, and C. C. Ellis; Majors H. H. Barnett, G. A. Tower, and H. de H. Haig. In Madras—Colonel T. W. Shone, C.B., D.S.O., Lieut.-Colonel A. Heathcote; and Majors F. Peel and A. J. Kelly. In Bombay—Lieut.-Colonels E. Glennie and E. Blunt; Brevet-Lieut.-Colonels F. H. Kelly; and Majors G. T. Jones, F. W. T. Attree, and C. B. Mayne.

Lieut.-Colonel N. P. O'Gorman, late Lincolnshire Regiment, is granted an extension of his appointment as D.A.A.G., Hong Kong, for three months from the 18th inst.

Major F. L. Nathan, R.G.A., Assistant-Superintendent, has been appointed Superintendent of the Royal Gunpowder Factory, Waltham Abbey, vice Colonel J. B. Ormsby, retired.

The officers who graduated at the Staff College at the end of last term were: Majors F. J. S. Cleeve, R.A.; C. S. O. Monek, Coldstream Guards; and E. H. S. Twyford, Scottish Rifles; Brevet-Majors A. G. Hunter-Weston, R.E.; C. J. Mackenzie, Seaforth Highlanders; and Captains J. H. V. Crowe, A. W. Gay, G. F. Milne, J. G. Baldwin, and M. C. P. Ward, R.A.; J. S. Fowler, D.S.O., R.E.; A. L. Lynden-Bell, Buffs; C. R. Ballard and C. Ross, Norfolk Regiment; W. P. Braithwaite and A. G. Boyle, Somersetshire Light Infantry; J. H. W. Pollard, Royal Scots Fusiliers; A. H. S. Hart, East Surrey Regiment; C. B. Jervis-Edwards, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry; H. C. MacTier, Hampshire Regiment; A. T. England, Derbyshire Regiment; R. W. Thompson, Loyal North Lancashire Regiment; A. W. Elles, Yorkshire Light Infantry; E. St. G. Pratt, Durham Light Infantry; F. C. Dundas, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders; A. J. Chapman, Royal Dublin Fusiliers; the Hon. H. Yarde-Buller, Rifle Brigade; and W. C. Knight, D. D. Baynes, F. Rannick, and J. M. Home, I.S.C.

Major A. G. Duff, 2nd Batn. Black Watch; Captain T. Fetherstonhaugh and Lieutenant C. B. Chamley, 2nd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders; Lieutenant J. B. Gillatt, 1st Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders; and 2nd Lieutenant W. P. H. Hill, 2nd Batn. Royal Fusiliers, sick and wounded, are on passage home from South Africa in the Dunera, which left on the 1st inst.

Brevet-Major the Hon. E. Baring, 10th Hussars, has taken up his duties as Military Secretary to Lord Curzon in India on appointment.

Captain the Hon. J. G. Beresford, 7th Hussars, will join the Duke of Connaught's staff in Ireland as A.D.C.

Captain M. McNeill, late 4th Dragoon Guards, will act for the present as Assistant Military Secretary to the Duke of Connaught in Ireland.

Captain J. I. Lang, C.M.G., R.E., left Liverpool in the Elder Dempster liner Sokoto on Wednesday for Lagos. Captain Lang is the British Commissioner appointed to meet Captain Toutée, the French Commissioner, to delimit the boundaries of the respective countries in Northern Nigeria. The representatives will meet about the end of February at the Ocapara River, which is at the north-east corner of the French Dahomey territory. The Commissioners start their work from the 9th parallel, and will continue north-east until the right bank of the Niger is reached. The expedition will pass through Nikka, Borgu, and other places prominently mentioned a couple of years ago before the conclusion of the Anglo-French agreement. Captain Toutée is a well-known French African explorer, and Captain Lang, who has had great African experience, is the British official who in 1892 delimited the western Gold Coast boundary in conjunction with the French Commissioners.

Captain W. Triggs, retired list, Army Pay Department, has accepted the appointment of Paymaster of the City of London Imperial Volunteers in South Africa. In Captain Triggs's absence the Army Assurance Association will be conducted conjointly by Mr. R. A. Chambers, at present branch manager at Aldershot, and Mr. E. C. Triggs, whilst Mr. Alan Burne will take over the Aldershot branch.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

SUMMARY OF THE WAR.

Saturday, Jan. 6.

Gen. Sir Redvers Buller received from Sir George White at Ladysmith heliographic despatches indicating that the Boers were making a serious assault on his defences. The first message was sent off at nine a.m. stating that the enemy had attacked Caesar's Camp at 2.45 a.m. in considerable numbers. They had everywhere been repulsed, but fighting was at that time in full operation. The next message was sent two hours later, when Gen. White said that the enemy had been strongly reinforced from the south. At 12.15 a third despatch stated that the enemy had been beaten off for a time, but they were still round the British position in great numbers, and evidently preparing for another attack. At 3.15 p.m. Gen. White reported further fighting, adding that he was very hard pressed. The news was published in London on Monday morning, and in the afternoon it was announced from the War Office that Gen. White had succeeded in repulsing all the Boer attacks with heavy loss to the enemy. The telegram in which this intelligence was conveyed was this:—

"Frere Camp, Jan. 8.

"Message just received from Gen. White, dated two p.m., Jan. 7: An attack was commenced on my position, but chiefly against Caesar's Camp and Wagon Hill. The enemy were in great strength, and pushed their attack with the greatest courage and energy. Some of our entrenchments on Wagon Hill were three times taken by the enemy and retaken by us. The attack continued until 7.30 p.m. One point in our position was occupied by the enemy the whole of the day, but at dusk, in a very heavy rainstorm, they were turned out of this position at the point of the bayonet in the most gallant manner by the Devon Regiment, led by Lieut.-Col. Park. Col. Ian Hamilton commanded on Wagon Hill, and rendered valuable services. The troops have had a very trying time and behaved excellently. They are elated at the services they have rendered to the Queen. The enemy were repulsed everywhere with very heavy loss, greatly exceeding my side, which will be reported as soon as lists are completed."

A reconnaissance in force was made from Frere Camp during the afternoon by Lieut.-Gen. Clery's division and the mounted troops towards Colenso. The enemy's trenches were severely shelled for miles by the naval guns and field artillery, but no reply was made except a few rifle volleys directed against the Natal Carabiniers when they approached Colenso. The troops returned to camp at 6.30 p.m. The idea of the enemy was to draw our troops into a trap, as he was plainly seen moving about the hills, but could not be induced to accept action. Gen. Clery had with him two squadrons 13th Hussars, the Natal Carabiniers, South African Light Horse, Mounted Police and Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry, 7th and 14th Batteries and two remaining guns of the 66th Battery R.F.A., 2nd Batn. Queen's, left half of 2nd Devonshire Regiment, 2nd Batn. Royal Scots Fusiliers, 1st Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, 2nd Batn. East Surrey Regiment, and 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers. Lieut.-Gen. French had to report from Colesberg an unfortunate mishap by which a company of the 1st Batn. Suffolk Regiment were taken prisoners. On Friday night four companies under Lieut.-Col. Watson advanced against a low hill a mile from camp. At dawn they made an attack, but owing to some confusion three-quarters of the troops returned to camp, obeying an order to retire, which appears to have come from the enemy's line. The remaining company held their ground till they were overpowered by numbers, when they surrendered, 70, including seven officers, being taken prisoners.

Reuter's correspondent, in a despatch published on Thursday evening, thus accounts for the unfortunate incident, showing that it was again a case of treachery:—

"The disaster to the Suffolk Regiment was not due to the rashness of the British officers. The late Col. Watson, after a most careful survey of the position and the surrounding country and of all the possibilities, expressed his conviction that his men could capture the kopje, which was two miles to the north-west of Colesberg, and the possession of which Gen. French himself considered of the utmost importance, as it commanded the whole plain and road to the north and north west of Colesberg. The fact that the kopje also commanded a great part of the town of Colesberg added greatly to its strategic importance. Accordingly Gen. French, after satisfying himself, gave his consent to Col. Watson's making the attempt, and that gallant officer advanced with four companies of his regiment on Saturday. There cannot be the slightest doubt, however, that the Boers who held the position were fully aware of the projected attack, and took measures accordingly. In the grey of the morning the Suffolks quietly ascended the hill, the plan being to carry the position with a rush. The enemy awaited the assault in perfect stillness 'till the leading companies of the Suffolks were almost within bayonet reach, when, at a preconcerted signal, the Boers opened an appalling fire, absolutely sweeping our men away. Col. Watson was wounded at the first discharge. He had just shouted the order for his men to charge when he immediately fell, riddled with bullets. At this movement the cry of 'Company retire' was raised, it is believed by the Boers. This the survivors of the Suffolks accepted as an order from their officers, and they beat a hasty retreat, which became a headlong descent of the hill, in which the British soldiers were raked by a destructive fire. The officers of the Suffolks were, however, true to the best traditions of the British Army. They refused to retire, and of 11 officers only one returned, the others being killed, wounded, or taken prisoners. Our artillery shelled the Boer position for five hours after the failure of the attack, and the enemy did not escape without some chastisement. I myself saw many of their ambulances and waggons carrying away their dead. At half-past nine a brief truce was arranged to allow both parties to collect their dead and wounded."

A telegram from Pretoria gave information that Kuruman, after a long and gallant defence, surrendered to the Boers on Jan. 1, when 120 prisoners, including several officers, were taken.

The War Office received details, furnished by Col. Baden-Powell, of the gallant sortie by a portion of the Mafeking garrison on Dec. 26. Though the troops were ultimately forced to retire, they behaved with splendid valour. The special correspondent of the Times said in his account published to-day:—

"At daybreak our guns opened fire and rapidly drew a reply from the enemy, our shells bursting within effective range. The enemy concentrated such an exceedingly hot fire that the advance of Capt. Vernon was almost impossible, but with remarkable heroism and gallantry Capt. Sandford and Vernon and Lieut. Paton and the scout Cooke, who guided the squadrons, and a few men actually reached the sand bags of the fort. Within 300 yd. of the area of the fort nothing living could exist, since the ground was swept by Mauser and Martini bullets. The men who had charged through this zone of fire suffered terribly, and in following their officers to capture the fort 20 men of C Squadron lost their lives. Capt. Sandford, No. 2 Troop, first fell, and Capt. Vernon, already twice wounded, and Lieut. Paton, No. 1 Troop, were killed at the foot of the fort. These two officers, climbing the ditch which surrounded the fort, thrust their revolvers through the enemy's loopholes, only to be shot themselves the next moment."

Telegram received at the War Office from the general at Cape Town:—

"Cape Town, Jan. 5, 3.5 p.m.

"Following message received from Col. Baden-Powell, dated Mafeking, Dec. 26:—

"We attacked one of enemy's works this morning, endeavouring to push back cordon northwards. Our force—three guns, two squadrons Protectorate Regiment, one Bechuanaland Rifles, armoured train, &c. Enemy had strengthened work during night and doubled garrison since yesterday's reconnaissance. Nevertheless, our attack was carried out and pressed home with greatest possible gallantry and steadiness under very hot fire, but all efforts at gaining interior by escalade failed, fort being practically impregnable; and attack only withdrew after out of our force six officers had been hit and a large number of men. Nothing could have exceeded the courage and dash displayed. General situation remains unchanged. Health and spirits of garrison very satisfactory."

"Regret to report following casualties:—

"KILLED.—Capt. Ronald James Vernon, Capt. Harry Coddington Sandford, I.S.C.; Lieut. Harold Percival Paton, Protectorate Regiment; 300 Sergt. Hugh Lockhart Ross; Corp. 63 Michael James Heery, 74 Frank Martin, 246 Godfrey Pickard; Lance-Corps. 53 Thomas Dunn, 51 William Barnard Duffy; Tprs. 116 Edward Alfred Smith, 77 George McDougall, 44 John Holling, 104 Charles Christopher Wood, 109 John Tolcher, 113 Frederick William Nicholls, 55 Joseph Walter Gibbs, 59 Alexander Frederic Gurney, 60 William Hailes, 46 John Corry, 140 Theodore Baker, 103 Alfred Joseph Wood.

"PRISONERS.—Tprs. 73 John Puctmore Lucy, 21 Arthur Frederick Wood, 96 Algernon Tucker.

"WOUNDED.—Capt. Charles FitzClarence, Royal Fusiliers; 32 Squadron-Sergt.-Major Paget; Sergts. 33 Rems Henry Barry, 75 Horace Robert Martineau; Corp. 114 Charles Phillips, 412 Charles Lecamp; Lance-Corpl. 83 Henry Montgomery; Tprs. 35 Henry Appleton, 40 Edward Ashton Dawson, 64 Hempud, 382 Henry Alexander Schulz, 398 John Ebenezer Russell King, 406 Frederick Leach, 429 Merrick Sylvester Luckin, 81 John Champion Mitchell, 244 Walter Morgan, 86 Ernest Josiah Poole, 87 Alfred Ernest Ramsden, 92 Lawrence Stephen, 446 William Patrick Carroll, 162 Charles Donovan, 165 Stephen Frank Duberley, 218 Jacob Smith; Corpl. 25 Henry George Price Metcalfe, Cape Police; Sergt. Matthews, slightly wounded."

Telegram posted at the War Office from general, Cape Town, to Secretary of State for War:—

"Cape Town, Jan. 5.

"French reports, Jan. 4, left flank, about three miles from Colesberg to the north, attacked by 1,000 of the enemy early in the morning. Squadron of 6th Dragoon Guards, furnishing picket, charged effectively, but large numbers of Boers gaining ground by opening fire with rifles and quick-firing artillery guns, two companies of the 2nd Berkshire and four companies of the 1st Suffolk, expeditiously assisted by Royal Horse Artillery (attack them). Meantime 10th Hussars and section of Royal Horse Artillery on the right flank by their combination caused withdrawal of many, but few hundred held out on kopje. Our heavy fire prepared the advance of 150 mounted infantry, who pushed on under cover of ground, and dismounting, captured kopje and 19 prisoners. Enemy's loss 50. Boers disclosed to-day fresh position five miles from Colesberg to the north with two heavy guns. Enemy's evident effort of to-day was to reopen communication with Bacta. Casualties:—

"10th Hussars.—Killed: Major Harvey. Slightly wounded: Major Alexander. A few men hit.

"6th Dragoons.—Only known casualties: Dangerously wounded 2nd Lieut. Gibson. Three men hit.

"1st Suffolk.—Two men slightly wounded.

"Boers still in force on hills to south-east of Colesberg. Enemy's loss, Jan. 1, more than 50, including two field cornets. Many wounded. One gun damaged. Enemy reoccupied Dordrecht. Gatacre reports Boers withdrew to Stormberg. Elsewhere no change."

Appointments of officers to the City of London Imperial Volunteers announced officially:—

MOUNTED INFANTRY.—Col. H. C. Chomondeley, London Rifle Brigade; Capt. J. W. Reid, 3rd Middlesex V.A.; Capt. J. F. Waterlow, 2nd V.B. Royal West Surrey; Lieut. C. H. W. Wilson, 2nd V.B. INFANTRY.—Col. the Earl of Albemarle, Civil Service R.V.C. (as second in command); Col. A. G. Pawle, 18th Middlesex R.V.C.; Capt. A. Reid, 1st V.B. Middlesex; Capt. C. W. Berkeley, 3rd London R.V.C.; Capt. C. Matthey, London Rifle Brigade; Capt. F. J. Cousins, 5th Middlesex R.V.C.; Capt. R. B. Shipley, 1st Middlesex R.V.C.; Capt. R. W. H. Edis, 20th Middlesex R.V.C.; Capt. A. A. Howell, 3rd V.B. Royal Fusiliers; Capt. C. A. Mortimore, 3rd V.B. Royal West Surrey; Lieut. J. H. Smith, 5th Middlesex R.V.C.; Lieut. F. R. Burnside, 3rd V.B. East Surrey; Lieut. F. R. Jeffrey, 1st Surrey R.V.C.; Lieut. E. Treffry, H.A.C.; Lieut. E. D. Townroe, 4th V.B. East Surrey; Lieut. the Hon. Schomberg McDonnell, C.B., London Rifle Brigade; Lieut. P. F. Browne, 13th Middlesex R.V.C.; Lieut. W. B. Garnett, and W. B. L. Alt, 24th Middlesex R.V.C.; Lieut. C. P. Grindle, 19th Middlesex R.V.C.; Lieut. P. Croft, 20th Middlesex R.V.C.; Lieut. B. C. Green, 7th Middlesex R.V.C.; Lieut. W. J. P. Benson, 4th V.B. Essex; Lieut. J. W. Cohen, 13th Middlesex R.V.C., and (machine-gun section) Lieut. E. V. Welby, 1st Tower Hamlets R.V.C.

A despatch from Dundee reported that Surg.-Major Daly and 30 British ambulance assistants had gone to Pretoria with 29 wounded soldiers. Lieut. Carbery, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers, was still at Dundee in a precarious condition, but was receiving every possible attention. The other wounded from Dundee are being accommodated in Pretoria Hospital, where they will have every care. Major Daly and his staff proceed to Natal.

Sunday, Jan. 7.

Telegram from general, Cape Town:—

"At special request of French, Household Cavalry, 20th Battery R.F.A. and 1st Batn. Essex Regiment have been despatched to him as a temporary measure."

The Household Cavalry having reached Gen. French's column had their first outing to-day. The general reports that he took a squadron of them on a reconnaissance of the enemy's left flank two miles from railway on road to Achttertang. He drew a considerable force of the enemy, who, anxious about their communication with Norvals, withdrew their troops. Capt. Ricardo and four troopers were unfortunately taken prisoners.

Monday, Jan. 8.

The Queen telegraphed her congratulations to Sir George White on the gallantry of the troops at Ladysmith.

Announcement made of a resolve to raise a corps of gentlemen to serve in South Africa as mounted infantry and to form an integral part of the Imperial Yeomanry. The corps to be raised unit by unit throughout the United Kingdom, and to consist of civilians having the necessary qualifications as regards riding and shooting. Those who have formerly been in the Army to be eligible, but candidates need to have no present association with the Regular Services. The scheme of enrolment to be arranged so that groups of friends may have an opportunity of serving in the same corps, units not being divided, but their disposition as units to be regulated by circumstances and the organisation of the Imperial Yeomanry.

The Mansion House War Fund to-day reached and considerably exceeded the splendid total of £500,000 sterling, which was raised in 10 weeks, the original appeal by Sir John Moore, the late Lord Mayor, having been made on Oct. 23. The fund at the close of the day amounted to £512,800. It was considerably augmented by the payment of a large number of collections made in churches on Sunday in obedience to Her Majesty's mandate. In nearly every case the clergy explained that their remittance was a second offertory. The Governor of Hong Kong sent a sum of £7,500 as a first instalment of donations collected there for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association. The British Minister at Buenos Ayres forwarded a second remittance of

Tuesday, Jan. 9.

Only report received as to position at the front from Gen. French, who reported that a reconnaissance on the enemy's east flank on the road to Achtertang, near Colesberg, caused a withdrawal of the Boers.

The Boer Government refused to allow the United States Consul at Pretoria to represent British interests in the Transvaal. The American Cabinet, our Washington correspondent telegraphs, has decided to make a strong representation on the matter to the Boer Executive.

Telegram received from Boer camp outside Ladysmith via Lorenzo Marques:—

"Gen. Joubert sent an adjutant into Ladysmith on Saturday to wait on Sir George White with a message to the effect that he had been informed that under cover of night, trains other than those stipulated were coming into the Intombispruit Hospital Camp. Gen. White replied repudiating the charge. Many burghers who went home for the Christmas holidays have returned. They are said to be sick of the business, the hardships being frightful."

The Times published message from its correspondent at Modder River dated the 6th inst.:—

"The behaviour of the colonial troops under Lieut.-Col. Pilcher on the 2nd inst. is described by that officer as beyond praise, and as characterised in a high degree by enthusiasm throughout. Their success is viewed with pride by every branch of the Regular Army here, and will not be without effect upon all colonists, disloyal as well as loyal."

Royal Warrant promulgated on the subject of separation allowances, laying down that from the 1st inst. such allowances shall be issued at the following daily rates:—

Wife of soldier in Class 15 - - -	2	3
Wife of soldier in Class 16 - - -	2	1
Wife of soldier in Class 17 or 18 - -	1	4
Wife of soldier in Class 19 or 20 - -	1	1
Each child (girl under the age of 16 or boy under the age of 14) - - - - -	0	2

"When the family is in occupation of public quarters, and is provided with fuel and light, the wife shall, as heretofore, receive separation allowance at the rate of 4d. a day for herself and 1½d. a day for each child, subject to above conditions as to age. If the child be motherless the rate of separation allowance shall, in any case, be 4d. a day."

This document received the Queen's signature on the 8th inst.

The Secretary for War, in pursuance of the Royal Warrant, issued these instructions:—

"Paymasters will at once issue the difference between separation allowance at the above rates and any issues already made for the month of January. The new rates for families not in quarters are inclusive of allowances for lodgings, fuel, and light. Any issue of these allowances for the month of January will, therefore, be taken into account in the readjustment."

The infantry and mounted infantry sections of the City of London Imperial Volunteers paraded and were drilled at Wellington Barracks and the headquarters of the London Rifle Brigade respectively. The amount, £100,000, required for the equipment of the corps stated to have been fully subscribed.

Appointments announced to staff of the City Imperial Volunteers: Capt. the Hon. J. H. R. Bailey, Grenadier Guards, Adjutant of the infantry; Capt. Orr, late R.A., Transport Officer; and Surg.-Capt. R. R. Sleman, 20th Middlesex R.V.C. (Artists' Corps), and E. W. St. V. Ryan, 16th Middlesex R.V.C. (London Irish), Medical Officers.

Wednesday, Jan. 10.

Lord Roberts reached Cape Town with Lord Kitchener and members of his staff from England.

At Magersfontein Boers reported to be still extending their entrenchments, the adequate defence of which would, it is estimated, require a force of 30,000 men.

Sir Redvers Buller telegraphed that Boers claim their loss before Ladysmith on Saturday to be four killed and 15 wounded, although they admit enduring a withering fire from six masked batteries, and being beaten back at all points. The Free Staters are very dissatisfied at having been forced by the Transvaalers into the hottest corners, and suffered what they term "fearful losses."

Telegram received from special correspondent of Standard at Modder River:—

"All quiet here. Beyond the ordinary routine of outpost and patrol work or the occasional firing of our long-range ordnance, to which a reply is seldom vouchsafed, the column remains inactive. The enemy appears to have withdrawn a portion of their force from our immediate front. The prisoners taken by Col. Pilcher at Sunnyside, most if not all of whom are British subjects, will be taken to Cape Town to stand their trial for high treason."

Total casualties up to date given in a return as killed: Officers 89, men 938; wounded officers 259, men 3,416; missing (prisoners): officers 102, men 2,409.

Telegram received from Calcutta correspondent of Daily Mail:—

"The loyal spirit of the native princes in India, who are all desirous to assist in any possible way the British in South Africa, is beyond praise. In addition to those already despatched, or announced to be despatched, 800 horses which have been specially selected for regiments of the Imperial Service are to be sent as soon as ships are ready to convey them. They will be taken from almost every State which supports an Imperial regiment. The Maharajah of Kashmir has offered to supply, if required, the whole British Army in South Africa with Kashmir putties, which are the best in the world. At a large meeting of Hindus, Mahomedans, and Christians held at Jalandhar the following resolution was passed: 'This meeting heartily deprecates the loss of the only son of Lord Roberts, than whom a more dashing soldier or more brave general never visited India, and it deprecates as heartily the loss of the other British heroes in the pending war.' Instances of whole native regiments giving up voluntarily a day's pay for the Transvaal fund are reported daily, and the general spirit of the country in the present crisis is loyal to a degree."

Government accepted offer of a body of Mounted Infantry Volunteers from India, 250 strong, with horses.

Speaking at a luncheon at the Manchester Conservative Club, Mr. Balfour denied that the War Office had sent our Army into the field with guns which placed them at a hopeless disadvantage with our enemies. He did not claim that our Army system was perfect, but critics ought not to ignore the extraordinary military problem with which our War Office had to deal. There was no parallel between its problems and those with which continental headquarters staffs had to deal. The lesson to be learned from the war was that for the first time in the history of the world we had to meet an enemy entirely mounted.

Speaking at a banquet given at the Hôtel Métropole by the Association of Chambers of Commerce to its late president, Sir Stafford H. Northcote, on his appointment to the Governorship of Bombay, the Earl of Selborne gave an emphatic contradiction to rumours that attempts had been made at home to direct or interfere with the strategy of our generals commanding at the seat of war in South Africa. There were absolutely no grounds for these statements.

Thursday, Jan. 11.

Announced with the approval of the War Office that a special corps is to be raised for service, composed of men who will provide their own kit, mount, and cost of transport for service in conjunction with the Imperial Yeomanry.

Lord Wantage, V.C., published a letter giving an account of the work of the Red Cross Society in South Africa together with interesting reports from Col. J. S. Young, the society's chief commissioner at the seat of war.

Friday, Jan. 12.

A telegram received during morning at the War Office from Sir Redvers Buller to effect that he occupied the south bank of the Tugela at Potgieter's Drift yesterday morning and seized the pont. The river was in flood. The enemy are strongly entrenched about 4½ miles to the north of Gen. Buller's new position, which is considerably to the west of Colenso.

It is stated that at the battle of Modder River Lord Methuen's charger reared violently, throwing its rider, and that Lord Methuen is suffering from spinal injuries, and will probably have to vacate his command.

There is no change to report from Gen. French's field of operations. Our troops are still holding the position on the enemy's right flank commanding the Colesberg Bridge road.

The Portuguese Government at Delagoa Bay have revived the enforcement of an old law which requires all persons leaving Portuguese territory to obtain first a passport signed by the Governor-General. It is understood that applicants must guarantee through their Consuls that they are not going to the Transvaal to fight.

The Mansion House Fund for the widows and children amounted to £535,000; the Daily Telegraph Shilling Fund to 2,048,963 shillings, the sum of £492 8s. having been received yesterday.

Free accommodation at the Hôtel l'Hermitage, Monte Carlo, for two officers who may be invalidated home from South Africa, has been placed at the disposal of the War Office by the directors, MM. Benoist and Fourault.

NATIONAL TOAST.—"Here's to John Bull, Pat, and Sandy, in Grant's Morella Cherry Brandy." Obituary.

NAVY.

Commander G. K. Moore.—Commander George Kains Moore, retired, died at Worthing on the 31st ult., aged 56. He became Midshipman, 1858; Sub-Lieutenant, 1863; Navigating Lieutenant, 1867; Staff-Commander, 1879, and retired as Commander, 1890. His last appointment was Master Attendant of Hong Kong Yard, 1888-89, from which he was invalided, and subsequently retired in consequence of ill-health. Was Navigating Lieutenant of the Euphrates during the Zulu War, 1878-79, and received medal for his services.

ARMY.

Gen. D. Boyd.—Gen. Daniel Boyd, retired list, I.S.C., of Broomwood, Bournemouth, died on the 7th inst. of pneumonia, aged 81. He joined the Army Jan. 19, 1837; became Captain Aug. 19, 1847; Major Feb. 18, 1861; Lieutenant-Colonel Jan. 19, 1863; Colonel Jan. 19, 1868; Major-General Dec. 31, 1880; Lieutenant-General April 1, 1882; and General Jan. 22, 1889; He was placed on the retired list July 1, 1881.

Gen. E. T. Fasken.—Gen. Edward Thomas Fasken, retired list, I.S.C., died at 214, Cromwell-road, S.W., on the 9th inst., aged 77. He joined the Army June 11, 1840; became Captain June 11, 1855; Major, Feb. 18, 1861; Lieutenant-Colonel June 11, 1866; Colonel June 11, 1871; Major-General July 1, 1881; Lieutenant-General Jan. 14, 1887; and General March 1, 1891.

Major-Gen. H. T. Duncan, C.S.I.—Major-Gen. Harvey Tucker Duncan, C.S.I., Colonel, retired list, I.S.C., died at Upper Norwood on the 6th inst., aged 73. He joined the Army Dec. 30, 1847; became Captain Feb. 18, 1861; Major Dec. 20, 1867; Lieutenant-Colonel Dec. 20, 1873; Colonel Dec. 20, 1878; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General Feb. 1, 1880.

Major-Gen. J. E. H. Prior.—Major-Gen. John Edward Hale Prior, who had been appointed to the command of the 15th Infantry Brigade, South African Field Force, died on the 8th inst. at the Queen's Hotel, Farnborough, of pneumonia following influenza, aged 52. The third son of the late Col. G. Nelson Prior, Gen. Prior had only just been gazetted a Major-General for service in South Africa from command of the 38th-64th Regimental District, Lichfield. Arriving at Farnborough to take up the duties of his command, he was attacked with influenza, and, as announced last week, became so seriously ill that his medical advisers declared it impossible for him to embark on Sunday last as had been arranged. Pneumonia supervened, and he died on Monday. Gen. Prior entered the old 80th Foot as Ensign in March, 1868, and was thenceforward associated with the South Staffordshire Regiment for the remainder of his military career. His only staff service was a short period of one year, 1878-79, during which he was specially employed at the Cape. In 1875-76 he was present as a Subaltern in the Perak expedition (medal with clasp), and in 1878-79 he served in the South African War. He was present in the operations against Sekukuni in 1878, and served with the Frontier Light Horse at the action in the Intombi Valley and with the Flying Column at the battle of Ulundi (twice mentioned in despatches, brevet of Major, and medal with clasp). From 1891 to 1895 he commanded the 2nd Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment, relinquishing it to go to Lichfield, where he remained until the 22nd ult., when he was gazetted to the command of the 15th Brigade, forming part of the 7th Division, under Lieut.-Gen. Tucker.

Major-Gen. H. E. T. Williams.—Major-Gen. CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Capt. Ricardo, with four troopers, 630 C. H. Hole, 629 H. Neill, 119 T. Ovard, and 713 F. Goodman, are reported officially to have been taken prisoners in the reconnaissance near Colesberg on Sunday last.

5th Dragoon Guards.—Capt. Stuart has arrived at Durban from India in the Palamcottia in charge of a draft of 70 men and 10 horses.

3rd Hussars.—Lieuts. Kortright and Madden are en route to South Africa with the 16th Lancers, with which regiment they volunteered for active service.

5th Lancers.—A private telegram from Ladysmith states that Lieut.-Col. Fawcett, who was wounded in action on Dec. 22, has lost the thumb of his left hand and was wounded in his left knee, but is now doing well and is in good health.

6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons.—2nd Lieut. Gibson was dangerously wounded in action whilst serving with Lieut.-Gen. French's force on the 4th inst.

9th Lancers.—Capt. Stanley has arrived at Durban from India in the Palamcottia in charge of a draft of 24 men and 10 horses. The report is now denied that Lieut. Lord Charles Bentinck was wounded in the recent fighting before Mafeking.

10th Hussars.—Major Harvey, who lost his life last week at Colesberg, was leading two squadrons, it appears, in a charge, when his horse suddenly came against a barbed wire fence which had been cut the previous day, but had been repaired. After their gallant leader had fallen several men rushed forward to cut the wire, but were at once fired upon by the Boers and were ordered to retire. A telegram, dated Rensburg, Jan. 5, "detained by censor," says:—

"Lieut. Milbanke to-day went out with a patrol of five men in the plain north of Colesberg. They were fired on by one of the enemy's outposts and returned. The Boers galloped to intercept them, and slightly wounded Lieut. Milbanke in the thigh."

14th Hussars.—Headquarters and the main body arrived at Durban on the 6th inst. from Cape Town in the Victorian.

15th Hussars.—Capt. and Adj. Hambro and Lieut. Knowles left Bombay with the 16th Lancers for service in South Africa.

16th Lancers have left Bombay in the Landula, Fuzilka, and Narrung for South Africa. The deaths have been recorded of three more Aliwal veterans of the regiment during the past year. Thomas Allen, age 77, died May 30; Sergt. Isaac Ross, age 80, wounded at Aliwal, died Oct. 2; Trumpeter Samuel Irwin, age 83, joined the regiment in 1833, was wounded at Aliwal, died Dec. 8. This latter grand old man was throughout the Afghanistan campaign in 1838 and 1839. At the parade of veterans at Chelsea Hospital, Queen's Jubilee, 1897, he was the right-hand man of the 400 present, being the oldest warrior in the gathering. There are now only seven men left who marched out with the regiment 500 strong in December 1845.

19th Hussars.—A draft of 69 men has arrived at Durban in the Palamcottia from India to join headquarters.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The War Office announced on Saturday the detailed organisation of the four brigade divisions of field artillery which are being formed for South Africa, giving 72 more guns (18 of them howitzers), with 2,630 officers and men and 2,134 horses. The 12th (Howitzer) Brigade Division, composed of the 43rd, 86th, and 87th Field Batteries, each with six guns, is being mobilised, with its ammunition column at Woolwich, each battery numbering 199 officers and men and 162 horses. The batteries in the other brigade divisions are to reckon 175 officers and men, 137 horses, and six guns each, the composition being: 13th Brigade Division.—2nd Field Battery, mobilising at Shorncliffe, 8th at Hilsea, 44th at Colchester, and ammunition column at Weedon. 14th Brigade Division.—39th and 68th Batteries at Hilsea, 88th Battery and ammunition column at Weedon. 15th Brigade Division.—5th and 9th Batteries at Athlone, 17th at Woolwich, ammunition column at Chatham. The Howitzer Ammunition Column will consist of 112 officers and men, 92 horses, and 28 waggons, with 266 mules to be added in South Africa; the ammunition columns of the other brigade divisions, each of 92 officers and men, 86 horses, and 13 waggons, with 98 mules to be added. All the batteries are mobilising at their peace stations, and the divisional staff of the Howitzer Division at Woolwich, that of the 13th Brigade Division at Hilsea, the 14th at Weedon, and the 15th at Woolwich. Ox waggons for tent transport, &c., will be added as required.

J Battery R.H.A. left Bombay on Thursday in the Ujina for Durban.

T and Q Batteries R.H.A. arrived at Cape Town on Thursday from Liverpool in the Manchester Corporation.

The 83rd, 84th, and 85th Batteries R.F.A. left Aldershot on Monday for Southampton, and embarked in the Manchester Port for South Africa.

The 90th Battery R.F.A. will leave Longford on Monday for Aldershot, where it will arrive on Tuesday.

Capt. C. de Sausmarez and R. O. Martin and Lieut. P. H. Hay-Coghlan have been selected for special service in South Africa.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Major Kinloch, second in command of the 3rd Batn., has been selected for the 1st Batn., vice Col. Hutton, C.B., whose extended term is about to expire. Brevet-Major Lord Edward Cecil, D.S.O., was not wounded as reports at first made out in the recent fighting at Mafeking, but he was down with fever when the last message left. Lieut. the Hon. F. C. Stanley, 1st Batn., who had been given permission to serve with the Imperial Yeomanry, has been recalled to duty with his battalion at Windsor, it having been decided that the necessities of the Service will not allow of regular regimental officers being spared for Yeomanry duty.

Coldstream Guards.—Lieut. Grant, 1st Batn., is on passage home from Cape Town in charge of invalids in the Dunera, which sailed on the 1st inst.

Royal Scots (1st).—Capt. Loch, 2nd Batn., has been appointed Adjutant of the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles.

Buffs (3rd).—The 2nd Batn. was due at Cape Town yesterday from Southampton in the Gaika. Capt. Trollope, 1st Batn., is ordered home from India to join the depot at Canterbury. Capt. McDouall has joined the 2nd Batn in South Africa on promotion. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave Canterbury on Friday next for Cork, there to be quartered on embodiment.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn., strength 725, left Southampton on Thursday in the Nile for South Africa.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—The 6th (Militia) Batn., strength 824, left Southampton on Thursday in the Umbria for South Africa.

ORDINARILY SHORT PERIODS of preparation, some by candidates who passed direct from ONSLOW HALL at the EARLIEST POSSIBLE AGE, others by those who had previously failed from elsewhere, and whose case was considered absolutely hopeless, are a sure proof that Mr. TRIPPEL'S system of education is safe and sound, and thoroughly up-to-date.

Mr. TRIPPEL'S Establishment has also earned a reputation for DISCIPLINE, ORGANISATION, and PUNCTUALITY—hence superior quality of results and rapidity of successful preparation.

A special feature at ONSLOW HALL is the attention given to PHYSICAL CULTURE. A very large Recreation Hall is attached to the house and equipped as a first-class Gymnasium. Physical Development is under the personal direction of LIEUT. FLYNN, late 5th DRAGOON GDS. There is also a spacious Billiard Room.

The Establishment has the use of grounds for hockey, tennis, cricket, football, and golf in the Old Deer Park, and the pupils are instructed in RIDING by Mr. SAVIGEAR, late Chief Instructor at Woolwich and Sandhurst.

MR. H. F. TRIPPEL, ONSLOW HALL, THE GREEN, RICHMOND, SURREY.
The Term has Commenced.

Telegraphic Address: "Trippel, Richmond, Surrey."

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—The colours of the 2nd Batn. were placed in the custody of the civic authorities in the Guildhall on Saturday with all ceremony. The colours, under an escort of 40 men, commanded by Capt. Lawford, reached the Mansion-house Station from Hounslow shortly after noon, and, headed by the full band, marched to the Guildhall. On the arrival of the Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the Lady Mayoress, and Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Treloar and Mr. Sheriff Bevan, a procession was formed at the main entrance and moved along to a dais at the east end of the hall. There were also present Major-Gen. Trotter, commander of the Home District, Lieut.-Col. Sir Henry Smith, Commissioner of City Police, Sir John Monckton, Town Clerk, the Rev. Stephen Barrass, chaplain to the Lord Mayor, and Mr. Secondary Roderick. Preceded by Col. Guyon, commander of the regimental district, the colours were borne by Lieut. Hibbert and Lieut. Guyon to the front of the dais, the band meanwhile playing the National Anthem. Col. Guyon, in handing the colours to the Lord Mayor, thanked him for the honour that he had done the battalion in receiving the same, adding that he was sure they would be safe in the custody of the City of London. The Lord Mayor said that he had great pleasure in accepting, on behalf of the Corporation, the trust that day reposed in them, and the battalion might rest assured that the City would zealously and faithfully guard the colours entrusted to its keeping. The colours already recorded a great many achievements of the battalion, and it was quite probable that in future further legends might be inscribed thereon. In the meantime the colours should have in that historic hall a place of honour. At the conclusion of his address, the Lord Mayor, followed by the two sheriffs, who carried the colours, walked down the hall and took up a position opposite the Elcho Challenge Shield, which has been kept at the Guildhall for the last few years. The colours having been saluted by the escort were placed in position on either side of the shield. This done, the Lord Mayor and sheriffs returned to the dais, and after Col. Guyon had again thanked the Lord Mayor and the Corporation for accepting the custody of the colours, the ceremony was brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the Queen." Col. Guyon and the other officers afterwards lunched with the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House. Col. Good, commanding the 6th (Militia) Batn., has intimated to the War Office the willingness of the officers and men of the battalion to volunteer for service in South Africa.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—The 2nd Batn. is due at Cape Town on the 23rd inst. in the Assaye from Southampton.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—The 2nd Batn. is due at Cape Town on the 26th inst. in the Goorkha from Southampton.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—A draft of 106 men has arrived at Durban from India in the Palamcottia to join the 1st Batn.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—The 2nd Batn. arrived at Cape Town on Wednesday in the Sumatra from Southampton. Lieut. Bassett, 3rd Batn., has been selected to do duty with the batn. in South Africa. The 4th (Militia) Batn. will leave Hertford on Tuesday next for Dublin, there to be stationed on embodiment.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—The 1st Batn. arrived at Cape Town on Saturday in the Gascon from Southampton. Capt. Daniell, 2nd Batn., is ordered to join the 1st Batn. on service. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Wexford on Thursday for Aldershot, and arrived there yesterday and took over quarters on embodiment.

Yorkshire Regiment (19th).—Major Cartwright, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months on urgent private affairs.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—An Army Order was issued on Tuesday directing the embodiment of the 5th (Militia) Batn. at Bury on a date to be named, not earlier than the 22nd inst.

Royal Scots Fusiliers (21st).—Capts. Dick and Northey; Lieuts. Christian, Rumbold, and McConaghey; and 2nd Lieut. Biggs, 2nd Batn., reported missing after the action of the 15th ult., are now stated in a Pretoria telegram to be quite well. They are prisoners of war.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—The 2nd Batn. left Southampton on Sunday in the Britannic for South Africa.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—The 2nd Batn. will leave Southampton to-day in the Bavarian for South Africa. The battalion took leave of its colours on parade at Aldershot on Tuesday morning. The colours were brought on parade, cased, and handed over to Capt. Grant and Lieut. Riddell for conveyance to the depot. They were marched past the battalion on parade and thence to the railway station. Here the band played the Welsh national hymn, "Land of My Fathers," and as the train steamed out "God Save the Queen," followed by "Auld Lang Syne." On the pole of the Queen's colour was the silver wreath of immortelles placed there by Her Majesty to commemorate the gallant efforts of Lieuts. Melville and Coghill to save the colours after the disaster at Isandhlwana and the heroic defence of Rorke's Drift in the Zulu War of 1879. Lieut.-Gen. Ross, formerly commanding the battalion, presented the men of the battalion with 1,000 briarwood pipes, 1,000 packets of tobacco, 1,000 pairs woollen socks, and 60 patent mincing machines. In addition, Mrs. Ross has presented the regiment with 500 letter-books, with ink pencils attached. The commanding officer feels that among the numerous presents which are being made by the people of Wales and others, none will be more valued than that of an old and distinguished colonel, to whom we all tender our most cordial thanks."

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—The 1st Batn. is due at Cape Town on the 26th inst. in the Braemar Castle from Southampton.

Gloucestershire Regiment (28th).—A draft of 56 men has arrived at Durban in the Palamcottia from India. The 4th (Militia) Batn. left Cirencester on Thursday for Athlone and arrived there yesterday to be quartered on embodiment.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th) will leave Southampton to-day in the Bavarian for South Africa. The committee of the past and present non-commissioned officers and men's regimental dinner club have issued their annual report. We are glad to find that the club is in a satisfactory condition, and that the annual dinner is growing in popularity as it ought to do. Lieut. Wilson has relinquished his appointment in the Egyptian Army in order to accompany the battalion on service.

Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry (32nd).—Capt. Lewin, who has been Adjutant of the Liverpool Irish Volunteer Rifles for the last 2½ years, has been selected to proceed to South Africa on the staff of the Imperial Yeomanry, to whom he will act as commissariat and transport officer.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (33rd) is due at Cape Town to-day from Southampton in the Orient. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave Halifax on Wednesday next for Cork where it will arrive on Thursday to be quartered on embodiment.

Worcestershire Regiment (36th) arrived at Cape Town on Monday in the Tintagel Castle from Southampton. Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Pain has been appointed second in command, vice Major Coningham, promoted to the command.

South Lancashire Regiment (40th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn., strength 824, is in readiness to embark at Liverpool on Monday next in the City of Rome for South Africa.

Black Watch (42nd).—Lieut.-Col. Carthew-Yorston is proceeding with all despatch to South Africa from India to assume command of the 2nd Batn. (73rd) on promotion, vice Lieut.-Col. Coode, killed at the battle of Magersfontein.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd) were due at Cape Town yesterday in the Gaika from Southampton. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave High Wycombe on Wednesday next for Limerick, where it will arrive on Thursday to be stationed on embodiment.

Sherwood Foresters (45th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn., strength 780, left Southampton on Thursday in the Umbria for South Africa. The colours have been left behind in the care of the civic authorities at Nottingham.

Essex Regiment (56th).—It has been intimated officially that the order for the embarkation of the headquarters and the service companies for conveyance to England from Burma will not be carried out as directed, owing to the war in South Africa. The battalion was to have left Bombay in the Dumera on Feb. 9.

East Lancashire Regiment (59th).—Major Carey, 1st Batn. (30th), has been appointed second in command of this battalion in India, vice Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Lake, promoted to half pay.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—Lieut. Widdrington, 2nd Batn., in charge of a draft of 77 men, has arrived at Durban from India in the Palamcottia. The 9th (Militia) Batn. will embark at Queenstown to-day in the Nile for South Africa.

Gloucestershire Regiment (61st) is due at Cape Town on the 20th inst. in the Cymric from Southampton.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave Devizes on Tuesday next for Fermoy, where it will arrive on Wednesday to be stationed on embodiment.

Hampshire Regiment (67th) is due at Cape Town on the 23rd inst. in the Assaye from Southampton. "Cavalryman" writes: "Having witnessed the embarkation of the 2nd Batn. Hampshire Regiment at Southampton for South Africa, I should like to say how cruelly the men have been labelled. I never saw men settle down in better spirits, more quietly, and in more perfect order. When it is considered that they were going on active service from the shores of their own county the performance was most creditable. The critics who have written so severely are not soldiers, nor are they men of the world or they would have known better."

Durham Light Infantry (68th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn., strength 630, left Southampton on Thursday in the Umbria for South Africa. Lord Londonderry intended to address at Newcastle Barracks the company of 100 men of the 4th (Militia) Batn. who have volunteered for service in South Africa, and Lady Londonderry attended in his place and gave a short address to the men. In the course of a letter which was read to the men, Lord Londonderry said that although it was barely a year since he was appointed to its Honorary Colonelcy, his family and himself had been closely associated with the regiment, inasmuch as it was to a great extent raised by his grandmother and for many years commanded by his father. That their representatives of the regiment would nobly discharge their arduous duties in South Africa would be rest assured. That their duties would be arduous he feared there could be little doubt; but he was equally certain that no difficulties would appear to them to be insurmountable, nor would they be disheartened should any reverse unfortunately occur.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Lieut.-Col. Eagar is stated officially to be progressing satisfactorily at Pretoria, but has been in a very serious condition. Major Welman and Capt. Bell are out of danger, though slowly recovering. Major Adye, who has been lying dangerously ill at Pretoria from enteric fever, is said to be making as good progress as can be expected. Bandmr. M'Bride, 4th Batn., has received a letter from his son, Corpl. M'Bride, in which he says: "My name was taken down after the battle of Stormberg for an act of bravery, viz., taking a wounded artillery major out of the line of fire and dressing his wounds."

Connaught Rangers (88th).—Col. Bence-Lambert has offered the services of all ranks of the 3rd (Militia) Batn. for service in South Africa or elsewhere.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—The Duke of Connaught paid a visit to Richmond Barracks, Dublin, on Wednesday morning and inspected the 4th (Militia) Batn. The men paraded under command of Col. Dick. His Royal Highness, having made a close inspection of the ranks, addressed the men, whom he complimented on their soldierlike and patriotic spirit in volunteering for service at the front. He was sure they would show bravery, endurance, good spirit, and good discipline, and that they would give a good account of themselves. He wished them a good journey, successful service, and a speedy and happy return. The battalion, strength 828, is in readiness to leave Liverpool on Monday next in the City of Rome for South Africa.

Gordon Highlanders (92nd).—A draft of 123 men has arrived at Durban from India in the Palamcottia.

Wiltshire Regiment (99th) arrived at Cape Town from Southampton in the Gascon on Saturday.

Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians) (100th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will leave Birr on Thursday next for Woolwich, where it will arrive on Friday to be quartered on embodiment.

Reviews.

THE LIFE OF COMMANDER HENRY JAMES.

The late Commander James died at Brighton in the 99th year of his age, a year or two ago, and his autobiography has now been published under this title, after being edited by Lieut. E. G. Festing, R.N. The secondary title of the book is A Midshipman in Search of Promotion, for it is well known that the late officer, like many others of his period, serving at a time when promotion was very slow, and when it depended largely upon personal influence, grew weary, and gave up the sea as a profession when he was yet a lieutenant. He was a link with the old war, for he had been in the Pompee in the Mediterranean in 1812. His personal log in the Révolutionnaire records the news of the death of George III., and illustrates the ship in mourning by a drawing of her from the stern with the yards "a-cockbill," while another page shows her dressed, and with yards manned, firing the salute for the accession of George IV. These points are exceedingly interesting in the book, which takes us afterwards to Brazil and Peru in the Tartar, gives us a glimpse of the half-forgotten war with Bolivar, and describes many events and incidents of naval life in the West Indies, at home, and in India. Generally speaking, the late officer's service was uneventful, and although he was appointed in 1842 1st Lieutenant of the Queen, he never took up the appointment and retired. He was a man of simple character, high-minded devotion to right, retiring in his disposition, and with a charm of manner which never left him until the last, and it was his great delight to discourse about his early service and to exchange experiences with his friends. These features of Commander James's character are reflected in the placid nature of his autobiography. The record of such a long life well deserved to be printed, the more so because it deals with service in a period about which little has been written, and concerning which not much is known.

LITERATURE OF THE WAR.

The war in South Africa has been a wonderful stimulus to the press, and many books and booklets have been published which are of merit. Col. Newnam-Davis is already known as a bright and picturesque writer, and his new volume, The Transvaal under the Queen (Sands and Co.), will add to his reputation. It is a record of personal experience during our occupation of the Transvaal, when "he gazed on Oom Paul's rusty hat, shot at glass bottles with Piet Joubert, and was an informal A.D.C. to Col. Lanyon." It is interesting to find him remarking that the Boer is convinced that discretion is the best part of valour, and that when he was expected to go up against an entrenched position defended by men with firearms, he inspanned his oxen and went back to his farm. Col. Davis was at the time in the Buffs, but went up country with Col. Durnford, and was concerned in the making of Carrington's Horse, in which he served. That force was the very type of what we require at the present time. If they did not all ride with a formal seat the men were firm in the saddle, mounted and dismounted quickly, and got across country without giving their horses sore backs. "Carrington's Horse had always been ready to move north, south, east, or west at an hour's notice. The officers' kits were of the scantiest, and the men had with them little more than they carried on their saddles. A tin basin and a square of looking-glass was all the furniture of the officer's tent; a bucket of water poured over us by a soldier servant was our morning tub. Our beds were a layer of straw, strewed over two hollows for the hips and shoulders scraped in the ground, and our bedclothes were a couple of blankets." With this force Col. Davis saw a good deal of marching through the country, and made acquaintance both with the ignorant Boer and his more intelligent representatives, as well as with the Hollanders, who at that time were detested as much as ourselves. He gives a repulsive picture of Paul Kruger, but has a better opinion of Joubert and some others, who, he says, have the strain of Tromp's Dutchmen in them. Altogether, the book is very interesting and will well repay perusal.

Mr. W. Brodrick-Cloete has republished, through Mr. Murray, a series of lectures on "The Great Boer Trek and the Origin of the South African Republics," delivered by his Grandfather, the well-known Henry Cloete. They enable the student to understand the incompatible ideas that exist in South Africa, and to realise that, though sagacity has not always ruled our counsels, it has been a considerable achievement to tranquillise Cape Colony and Natal, and, as Mr. Cloete says, the reader's forecast of the future will not be that of a pessimist. He points out that the native question is after all the kernel of the matter, and expresses the hope that we shall not take our hands from the plough until the furrow is cut clean and true.

The Transvaal in War and Peace, by Neville P. Edwards (Virtue and Co.), is a sixpenny serial which appears to be well written, and is certainly very well illustrated from photographs. There are pictures of scenery, of Boer life, of regiments, portraits of officers, and incidents of the war in abundance.

A new edition has been published by Messrs. Macmillan of South Africa of To-day by Capt. Francis Younghusband, who was twice in the country as correspondent of the Times. The chapter written before the war broke out is printed without alteration, but it is not difficult to see what would have been the author's opinion expressed in the conditions that now prevail.

Prinsloo of Prinsloosdorp, by "Sarel Erasmus" (H. MacLeay), is a story intended to depict in no friendly colours the "slimness" of the Boer. The hero is a voortrekker from Cape Colony, who goes through the mill of Transvaal officialdom, manages to be absent both at Laing's Nek and Majuba, but is greatly in evidence at Paardekraal. The interest of the story is, of course, entirely topical.

The Empress, of Calcutta, a well-illustrated magazine, has published two "military numbers," depicting and describing the departure of the Indian contingent to Natal. The pictures are very good.

RHODESIA WAR (1896) DESPATCHES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you permit me to draw your attention to the above despatches published in the London Gazette, March 9, 1897, and to direct your attention especially to the errors contained in the following paragraphs which I extract therefrom:—

"Capt. Llewellyn, Bulawayo Field Force (late R.N.), July 20, during a rush on Beresford's force (in the attack on Sikombo), ran to the Maxim, which was for a moment without a firer, and remained alone on it, keeping it in action, with the enemy within a few yards," &c.

"Capt. the Hon. J. Beresford, 7th Hussars, attached to Mashonaland Relief Force, when in command of a detached force in the action against Sikombo, Aug. 5, showed much coolness," &c.

The brave action referred to in the first of the above extracts was not performed on July 20 as stated therein. Babayan's stronghold was attacked on this date. Sikombo's stronghold was not attacked on this date, but on Aug. 5, as stated in the second of the above extracts, and Capt. Llewellyn should therefore have been credited with his gallantry on this last-named date. Capt. the Hon. J. Beresford, 7th Hussars, was attached to the Matabeleland Relief Force under Lieut.-Col. Plumer and not to the "Mashonaland Relief Force" as stated in the second of the above extracts. Is it not strange, sir, that such inaccuracies as those to which I have drawn your attention should appear in despatches?

MARINE OFFICERS' GRIEVANCES.

IT is promised us that when Parliament re-assembles there shall be an agitation for the redress of the grievances of the marine officers. Sir John Colomb and Mr. Arnold-Forster have the matter in hand, and with their experience in the conduct of similar operations the campaign should be lively. That the complaints of the marine officers are not without foundation must be patent to our readers, since we have during the past year discussed the matter at some length, and have allowed full expression of their views to members of the corps who are well qualified to speak on behalf of their brother officers. If the discontent which exists in the marine corps can be allayed without loss of naval efficiency nobody will be more pleased than ourselves. This is indeed the problem to be solved, but, so far as we can gather from recent letters to the press, there is danger lest in their zeal for redress the spokesmen of the marine officers should mislead the public on the issue. It is essential to remember that the grievances are not shared by the rank and file of the marine corps; they have complaints of their own doubtless, but these are not just now to the fore. In saying this we do not for one moment mean that the men would not be just as delighted as their officers if they could be employed in South Africa, but this is a feeling shared by everyone in the naval and military services. If, too, it were true that the Admiralty had despatched to South Africa large numbers of bluejackets for landing purposes, the marines would certainly have reason for discontent, but the seamen have merely been sent out for the ships, and to fill vacancies in the squadron. On the general question of employing a marine battalion, Mr. Goschen's explanation should be sufficient for any but the wilfully blind.

We have already pointed out in these columns what we believe to be at the bottom of the grievances of the marine officers. It is, as Mr. Arnold-Forster has put it, that they obtain "the fewest possible opportunities of performing the more interesting duties of soldiers," and we can quite believe that a very large number of the best and most energetic officers in the corps feel this limitation of the scope of their work very keenly. But we know, too, that these officers share with us the regret we have expressed that statements should have been published which have a tendency to breed bad blood between themselves and their brethren of the Navy. It is because we feel sure that nothing is more certain to delay the redress of those grievances which have a solid foundation than the publication of distorted facts and misleading assertions that we have protested against the charges which have been recently made. It might be supposed, for example, after reading the letters of Sir John Colomb, that the landing of mixed bodies of seamen and marines under naval officers was an innovation, and that, on the contrary, the usual custom has been to employ marines alone under their own officers. Nothing could be further from the truth, and to speak of "the growing practice" of landing naval officers and seamen for military operations is to distort facts. There never was a time in the history of the Navy when it was not the practice to land naval officers with seamen, and it is very significant that it was only when the Navy had been allowed to fall into a state of dangerous weakness that the Admiralty of the day were persuaded into allowing battalions of marines to be used in the manner which Sir John Colomb desires to see revived. Surely, too, it is a misstatement to say, as he does in the letter which we publish elsewhere, that "the State pays for elaborately training marine officers and men for land warfare, the sea training is super-added." The end and aim of the training of a marine is to make him a useful member of the sea service, otherwise it is money thrown away; for it is because of his sea training, or mainly because of that training, that he is so much more valuable than the infantryman and artilleryman of the land forces. And this training, it should not be forgotten, he gets almost altogether under naval officers and in company with the bluejackets.

It is unfortunate in the public interest that at present the only openings for the exercise of the marine officer's ability and energy should lie in land service. There is no future for him seaward, and thus it is natural to find him advocating and supporting the garrisoning of the coaling stations with the men of his corps, or their employment in brigades or battalions in the campaigns in which we are so often engaged. But because it would be to the advantage of the marine officer that a certain proposal should be carried out, it by no means follows, as is frequently assumed, that it would also be for the benefit of the State. It is a fact to be taken into consideration also that the marine himself, whether of the artillery or infantry, is by no means so eager to be "bossed" by his officer as his officer is to have the "bossing" of him. Sir John Colomb asserts that it is impossible to sneer at any attribute of which one may be proud. He is doubtless proud of having been a marine officer, but let him ask a bluejacket for his opinion on the subject, and he will learn differently. Of course, prejudice is responsible for the bluejacket's views, but then may it not have been prejudice which inspired Major Plumb's references to "the same old naval game," and was it not prejudice which led Sir John himself to forget when he wrote of the midshipman who was killed at Graspán, that there was only a difference of three or four years in the age of "this water-trained schoolboy" and that of the captain of marines who fell on the same battlefield? It is by no means certain either that in a tight place the marines would not prefer to be led by sea officers, even if they were only midshipmen. This circumstance is not the least among the many which make the problem of how to improve the career of the marine officer a difficult one to solve. There is a close similarity between this problem and that which concerns the Royal Naval engineers. And the friends of the marine officers will do well to take a lesson from the unsatisfactory ending of the engineers' agitation, which was largely due to the ill-considered course which one of its advocates took in the Morning Post. It will not tend to the comfort and contentment of marine officers to create dissension between them and their messmates, nor can it add to the efficiency of the Navy or the advantage of the State to encourage the idea that a marine officer should regard the seaward side of his profession as a drudgery and a nuisance to be shirked.

Naval Notes.

The parliamentary return showing the strength of the principal maritime Powers, of which we printed a summary last week, scarcely deserves the wholesale condemnation which has been showered upon it by a section of the press. These returns are distinctly useful within certain limits, and it is not so vital a matter, as some critics are pleased to contend, that obsolete ships are still allowed to figure in the lists. Our Naval Intelligence Department cannot justly be taxed with magnifying the British fleet by an undue inclusion of useless vessels, this process being common to the return as a whole. Our old broadside ironclads, for example, are certainly no weaker than several of the French and Russian battleships still reckoned in the tables, except on the ground that the main armament of these older British ships consists of muzzle-loaders. We confess we should like to see these ships eliminated, but it would be entirely illogical to do so and not to omit simultaneously foreign battleships of the seventies, which cannot by any possibility rank in the first line of defence.

The Morning Post, commenting on this parliamentary return, says: "Though the return contains useful information, it is none the less to be regretted that such papers should be published under the sanction of Parliament. To the man who knows anything about naval matters they give no new information. To the general public they are entirely misleading. In the eyes of many people one ship is just the same as another, and there is a tendency to rely on numbers alone. It is difficult to see the value of such returns in any case, for the information contained in them is quite insufficient to afford means of judging as to the fighting value of different ships. Indeed, this is a matter where it is most difficult to arrive at a decisive opinion, as so many factors are involved. If such returns are to be published, however, they should certainly exclude from the list of British warships a number of vessels which no one would think of sending into action on any terms whatever."

But the expert is able to draw conclusions from these returns which the man in the street cannot; and it is worth noting that their substantial accuracy has never yet been questioned by the Service members of the House of Commons. They are useful as showing at a glance the building programmes of seven naval Powers, only two of which are supposed to be hostile to this country. Without traversing over again the disputed values of certain obsolete battleships it is worth noting, for example, that our own building programme promises us but a bare equality with France and Russia in armoured cruisers. We have thirty-one of these vessels built and building as against thirty-two built and building of those Powers. The proportion will strike most naval officers as being inadequate, for here there is no room for dispute over relative values, or at least very little. Some of our older armoured cruisers, such as those of the Australia class, are inferior in speed and gun power to the French ships, and even apart from this consideration Great Britain ought to possess a larger number of armoured cruisers than her possible rivals. Our splendid preponderance in protected cruisers cannot be thought to compensate, the armoured cruiser being more than a match for two protected cruisers. Even a very large superiority in battleships could not justify the Admiralty in permitting France and Russia to outbuild us in this type.

Several more letters have appeared in the Times upon the subject of naval training, the more important being those signed by Sir John Hopkins, "Navalis," and "J. R. T." Sir John Hopkins points out, as we did recently, that the original question of masts and yards training arose when the crews of four masted steamers of obsolete type were transferred to four modern vessels, and that he maintains, and a large number of naval officers agree with him, that the education of a seaman will be as effective, if not more so, in the latter vessels than in the former. The question, therefore, did not include, as it does now, any reference to harbour training, and this widening of the subject under discussion has the appearance, at all events, of a change of front. We suppose that it would be impossible to find a naval officer arguing that the harbour establishments and schools are not necessities, and equally impossible to find one wishing to see more men in the depôts and training academies than the educational requirements of the Service demanded. What it is really important to learn, therefore, is the amount of time which, in the opinion of the most experienced authorities, each man should during his service spend in training ashore and the amount of time he should spend afloat. As "J. R. T." says, the question of cost should not be considered by the naval authorities: "Let us be told plainly what the best system of naval training is, how far our existing system falls short of it, and what it would cost to adopt it: I know no way of answering these questions, about which it is now abundantly evident that wide differences of opinion exist, except by a full and searching inquiry; and if the Admiralty decline to institute such an inquiry, they will, in my humble judgment, incur as grave a responsibility as they fortunately escaped when the optimism of 1888 was translated into the Naval Defence Act of 1889."

What is particularly noticeable in this discussion is the way in which hasty assumptions are made by so many of the writers. A good instance of this kind of thing is referred to by "Captain, Royal Navy," who tells us of a friend of his who was wont to insist that the best gunners, torpedoists, or marksmen were those who had served an apprenticeship under masts and sail. To his astonishment, when he was able to submit the matter to a test in the case of the men who in one year passed through Whale Island, he found that he was completely mistaken. We have already pointed out that it would be well to obtain some data as to the relative number of days spent at sea or in harbour by the vessels of the Training Squadron and other ships, and also the number of hours devoted to spar and sail drill. Sir John Hopkins now asks for similar information. "It would be interesting," he says, "if someone who has the necessary statistics would give us in a tabulated form the number of men borne in the Navy year by year since, say, 1880, and the numbers at sea and in harbour respectively during that period; and I shall be surprised if the figures do not show that our proportion of seamen afloat has rather increased than decreased, despite the growth of shore establishments."

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford will have the Ramillies as his flagship in the Mediterranean, and Captain R. S. Lowry, who was his commander in the Undaunted, recommissions that battleship. Lieutenant M. J. G. Cay, flag-lieutenant, was a midshipman of the Undaunted under the noble lord's command. Commander the Hon. H. L. A. Hood, appointed second in command of the Ramillies, recently employed on transport duty at Liverpool, attained his present rank 1898 for his services on the Nile in the expedition to Khartoum, and was promoted Lieutenant for obtaining the highest record in passing for that rank, has been awarded the Beaufort Testimonial and the Good-enough medal, and is a gunnery officer. Being only thirty-one years of age, he has a long professional career before him. Staff-Paymaster W. le G. Pullen, his lordship's secretary, is somewhat senior for such an appointment, having already served upwards of six years as secretary to commanders-in-chief, and is senior to Vice-Admiral Sir John Fisher's secretary; but Mr. Pullen having accepted an appointment on Lord Charles's staff is too good an officer to allow such considerations to affect the performance of his important duties.

In a letter from Colenso a correspondent of the Times refers in highly eulogistic terms to the gun mountings designed by Captain Percy Scott. He says, "they worked splendidly, and we all regretted that the inventor was not there to see them. Had there been a dozen instead of only two such guns affairs would have turned out differently." Since the letter was written more guns have been sent up to Frere, where, from the telegrams, there can be no question that they are doing excellent service. That Captain Scott would like to be with them goes without saying, but he has had at Durban other work to do. The defence of that port on shore devolved upon him when the Boers were raiding Natal, and were indeed almost within sight of Maritzburg. Had General Joubert been able to make good his threat, and to have swept the colony down to the sea, we feel sure that he would have found Durban a nut too hard to crack. Presently there will be victories, and our advancing troops will be gaining laurels in the interior. It is to be hoped that when this happens the great services of Captain Scott will not be overshadowed and forgotten. To him, perhaps more than to any other man, may be ascribed the successful holding back of the enemy not only in Natal, but in the Cape Colony as well. He it was that made possible Captain Lambton's gallant stand at Ladysmith, which place, as a correspondent of the Times points out, would almost certainly have fallen long ago but for the assistance rendered by the long-range and lyddite-firing naval guns. And so also on the line of advance towards Kimberley it has been the naval guns which have done most work in keeping the Boers at a distance. And all these guns are mounted on carriages designed by the Captain of the Terrible.

The spirited action of Captain Philip F. Tillard, of the cruiser Magicienne, in capturing the German steamer Bundesrath may or may not be upheld by the prize court at Durban, but the fact that foreign recruits for the Boer Army, actually dressed in uniform, were found on board the vessel would in itself appear to justify Captain Tillard's action. It is highly probable, too, that the ship's cargo contained munitions of war, such as saddles and other horse equipment, so that the case is of extreme interest from many points of view. The ill-feeling excited by this capture among the Hollanders and German settlers of Lorenzo Marques is hardly likely to be seriously reflected in Germany, where the principles of international law are better understood. The views of Sir Charles Dilke, confided recently to a Daily Chronicle representative, are somewhat discounted by this seizure. Sir C. Dilke considers that it will be almost impossible to prevent the smuggling of arms, ammunition, and men through Lorenzo Marques, save with the co-operation of the Portuguese authorities, upon which he thought it would be useless to rely. The British Navy has shown ere now that many difficulties can be overcome by vigilant action, and we may conclude that the seizure of the German steamer will produce its effect on foreign merchants. It is clearly necessary to act with caution as well as firmness in the suppression of this irritating traffic in munitions of war. As for foodstuffs, our statesmen are seemingly agreed that Great Britain can ill afford to create a dangerous precedent certain to be used against her by the Powers at the first opportunity. The chances of our acquiring Delagoa Bay from Portugal during the present war are now held to be slight. If so, the more reason is there that our cruisers should exercise the greatest vigilance in checking the smuggling of men and arms.

From the latest information about the seizures of vessels off Delagoa Bay it appears unlikely that all of these will be condemned. Two of the German vessels have already been released, and even as regards the Bundesrath there now seems to be a doubt. It would be a mistake to hastily assume from this that the officers responsible for stopping these vessels had acted on insufficient grounds. In the case of the Herzog, for example, it seems that she was carrying military stores to a Dutch man-of-war, and if, as is stated, these were incorrectly described, it is a simple explanation of the action of the naval authorities. We have never been among those who believe that a very large amount of supplies for the Transvaal Government has entered through Lorenzo Marques since the war began, for it is in the nature of things that such transactions should become exaggerated by suspicion. However, it is highly probable that the action of the men-of-war in seizing these vessels and taking them to Durban will have a deterrent effect and in this way will be productive of good. At the same time it is somewhat strange that the British Government with the resources at its disposal is unable, as it apparently is, to make certain of what kind of cargo is put upon vessels trading to Delagoa Bay before they leave European ports.

THE ROYAL MARINES IN 1899.

It has been customary in this paper to give some slight sketch of the year's history of the corps of Royal Marines—a custom not to be neglected now since the past year has been as full of notable incident as any in their history.

The Naval Estimates authorised a small increase of 500 men to be proportionally divided between the two branches, and bringing the whole strength of the force to 18,500. The necessary extra recruits have now been nearly raised without lowering the standard, but to effect this, and owing to the increase made last year in the soldier's pay, some concession had also to be made to the marines when serving ashore, and the stoppages in respect of the ration have been materially reduced. The rush to the ranks of the Army in October, caused by the wave of war-fervour in that month, made the work of the marine recruiters slightly harder, but that difficulty was only temporary. A valued and long-asked-for concession has been made during the year to the 1st Class sergeant-instructors of infantry, musketry, and gunnery, who had previously ranked below quartermaster-sergeants and colour-sergeants, contrary to Army practice. This anomaly has been removed, and these valued and valuable non-commissioned officers now bear the title and rank of quartermaster-sergeant-instructor.

A slight addition was also made to the subalterns' and captains' lists, but not in proportion to the men added, and the corps is still very much under-officered. Hence the pressure which has long been felt in this respect at headquarters was continued, and it is hoped that the next estimates will do something to relieve it. However, on the question of promotion marine officers have certainly had no complaint to make. The flow has been exceptionally good, and majors have been promoted to lieutenant-colonel at a much younger age than has been usual in this corps—those in the Light Infantry comparing very favourably with any branch of the Service—a piece of good fortune which seems likely to continue through the coming year. In the Marine Artillery the promotion of subalterns to captain has beaten the record, the extreme youth of this year's captains having more than once been made the subject of comment in this paper.

This result has had three causes—the increase of the corps in recent years, the run of promotion in the higher ranks, and to an exceptional number of captains being seconded in Army pay. As far as can be foreseen, this run of promotion in the Royal Marine Artillery will now be followed by a corresponding block, as there will be practically no steps from compulsory retirement during the next few years, and this will tell somewhat hardly on the senior captains, who have not benefited at all from the increase to the corps since no addition has yet been made to the majors' list.

The usual battalion of Royal Marine Light Infantry was employed in the military manoeuvres on Salisbury Plain and the corps secured its usual success in peaceful competitions in skill at arms. The Royal Marines' Rifle Association have had a most successful season and are much to be congratulated on their new departure—the competitions arranged on all foreign stations, where "station badges" are competed for by the detachments of all ships serving abroad. This competition has not only tended to improve the shooting of Royal Marines embarked, but also, by emulation, the rifle shooting of the whole of our fleet.

At the Agricultural Hall the Royal Marine Artillery again came out first in the bayonet exercise and physical drill, and, further, won the regimental tug-of-war. In naval field artillery work they also beat the competing guns' crews from the Excellent and other ships at Portsmouth in their work with the new 12pr. quick-firing field gun.

In addition to the usual inspection of the Royal Marines at Chatham and Plymouth, on October 13, those stationed at Portsmouth paraded on Southsea Common for the inspection of Sir H. B. Tuson and the First Lord of the Admiralty. They formed a brigade of four strong battalions with machine guns, and a battery of field guns manned by the Royal Marine Artillery. They numbered over 3,000 men, 800 of these being from the depôt ships alone.

These peaceful achievements, however, pale before the more serious work taken in hand by the small portion of the corps on the South African Station. On October 20 the detachments landed at Simon's Town under Major Plumbe, R.M.L.I., and accompanied by two naval field guns were sent to the front, where they took a most honourable share in the battle of Graspan. Advancing in the first line they seized the final kopje and key of the enemy's position after suffering losses as great as any recorded in history for a successful attack. Of the forty-nine Marine Artillery present, Captain Senior and two were killed and twenty-five were wounded. The gallant leader of the battalion, Major Plumbe, was killed, two other officers were wounded, and the casualties amounted to ninety-one out of a strength of 213. The newspaper correspondents present on the field state that the Royal Marines were at once dubbed "the bravest of the brave," a compliment which was surely well deserved.

Lieut.-Colonel Gatliff, R.M.L.I., on the outbreak of war, received the important appointment of press censor at the Cape—he was held to be too senior to accompany so small a battalion. Major Aston, R.M.A., has also gone out to South Africa graded as D.A.A.G. for special service. Both these officers are Staff College graduates. Two further small detachments have been sent out, the first to refill the ships and the second to replace casualties. Needless to say the corps as a whole has been much disappointed at not being employed in a larger measure, and the Marine Artillery have been especially disappointed at not being employed as gunners. The First Lord has given an excellent reason for the retention at home of the sailors and marines, and it is only the idea that the blue-jackets have been given a better chance in work which should be the speciality of the marine that has provoked a most unfortunate discussion, which it is hoped may be buried with the advent of the New Year, and some better work be found for the marine which will reconcile him to his position in what is, after all, our first line of offence and defence—the Royal Navy.

THE USE AND MISUSE OF MARINES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—With reference to your article, "Mr. Goschen and the Navy," on the 23rd ult., you say you agree with what the First Lord of the Admiralty aptly says, "the first thing to be maintained is the efficiency of the ships." I absolutely agree with that fundamental principle of policy, and that is my special reason for being so hotly opposed to landing naval officers and seamen while keeping marines on board. It is also my reason for protesting against large numbers of bluejackets being despatched to South Africa while keeping a corresponding number of marines at home. Unless you mean to assert that the efficiency of ships is less impaired by taking the naval officers and seamen out of them than taking the marine officers and marines, you really ought to back my protest.

Further, unless you are prepared to declare that naval officers are better trained for military warfare than marine officers I cannot see you have a leg to stand on, although you do seem to tread upon my toes, in contesting my contention that marine officers and not naval officers should command a mixed force composing a naval brigade.

As regards your article headed "Marine Grievances," you say, "as an ex-marine officer," my "warm interest in the corps does not wholly excuse" my "sneers at the 'water-trained' officers serving with the naval brigades." There is no "sneer" in the simple fact. It is the interests of the State which concern me. Now the State pays for elaborately training marine officers and men for land warfare, the sea training is super-added; it also pays for the sea training of naval officers, and incidentally they get a mere smattering of military work. If it be a "sneer" to describe a naval officer as "water-trained," then it is a "sneer" to say a marine officer is "land-trained."

No officer of the Army, Marines, Militia, Yeomanry, or Volunteers would resent being described as "land-trained," and if there be in the whole naval Service one single naval officer bold enough—I will not say stupid enough—to write in his own name and tell your readers that he does not consider it an honour to be a "water-trained" officer I will really begin to wonder if my name is

JOHN C. R. COLOMB.

Dromquima, Kenmare.

Naval Personal.

H.R.H. the Duke of York was the guest of Lord Iveagh at Elvedon Hall this week.

Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, will be absent on leave from the 17th to 25th inst., and Rear-Admiral T. S. Jackson, Admiral-Superintendent of the dockyard, conducts the port duties during that period.

Rear-Admiral Sir John Hext, retired, formerly Director of Indian Marine, in which capacity he dealt with the sea transport of troops leaving India, has offered to organise and carry out the transport department of the Imperial Yeomanry Committee, and Lord Harris has gladly accepted his services.

Captain H. C. A. Baynes, of the Latona, arrived at Bermuda on Saturday last with a relief crew for the Indefatigable.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, of the Europa, does not embark the relief crew of the Ramillies until Monday next, and probably leaves during the following week.

Captain F. H. Henderson, late of the Fox, and Captain Peyton Hoskyns, late Commander of the Blonde, have been appointed Companions of St. Michael and St. George in recognition of their services while respectively commanding those vessels during the military operations, 1898-99, in the Sierra Leone Protectorate. The former officer had previously distinguished himself on both African shores as Sub-Lieutenant of the Vulture and Commander of the Raccoon on the East Coast. and Lieutenant and Transport Officer during the Ashanti campaign, 1873-74, and recently in the northern part of our West Coast possessions, in addition to which he was Senior Lieutenant during the Egyptian operations, 1882. The latter officer became Member of the Victorian Order in 1896 for special services on the occasion of the death of H.R.H. Prince Henry of Battenberg, who served in the Ashanti expedition of that year. Both officers are to be congratulated on obtaining this distinction, but as several others were employed at the same time a more generous distribution of honours might have been made.

Captain H. F. Royle left Plymouth on Saturday last in the Orient steamship Ophir for Australia to assume command of the naval establishments and Reserves at Sydney, N.S.W.

Captain W. des V. Hamilton, who shortly pays off the Ramillies at Malta, is to relieve Captain J. L. Hammet (recently promoted Rear-Admiral) in command of the General Depot and Fleet Reserve at Portsmouth. Captain Hamilton's ability and large experience eminently fit him for this most important appointment, where the control of considerable bodies of seamen requires the tact and forethought of an officer who has had to deal with large complements and the general details and supervision of the personnel of a fleet. His services as Flag-Captain on the North American and West Indian Station, and afterwards as chief of the staff in the Mediterranean fleet, together with his gallantry in the naval brigade in South Africa, 1878-79, sufficiently show the desirability of selecting this officer, who like his predecessor at the depot will attain flag rank before the usual term of command expires.

Lieut.-Commander H. D. Wilkin, of the Sparrow, pays off that vessel at Sheerness on Friday next.

Lieutenant E. G. W. Davey, who has served in the Royal yacht Osborne for the past three years, commissions the Speedy at Sheerness on Tuesday next to relieve the Harrier on the Mediterranean Station.

Staff-Commander R. G. Roe has been compulsorily retired on account of age. For the past eighteen months he has been Acting Staff-Captain at Devonport, and was fortunate in obtaining that appointment considering the large amount of home service he has enjoyed, and that for nearly fourteen years up to the present time he has only been away from England two of that period at Jamaica.

Chaplain the Rev. J. M. Morton arrived in England on Saturday last by the Royal Mail steamer Tagus from Jamaica after serving the usual period in the Urgent.

Fleet-Engineer J. T. Corner's promotion to Inspector of Machinery over the heads of seventeen of his seniors is due to the ability he has displayed during the past twelve years as chief engineer of our largest naval yard, where he previously held a junior post for seven years. At the same time it places those above him in an undesirable position, as some of them have records of long and faithful service which deserve recognition, and may be assumed by their professional brethren in civil life that they are not worthy of promotion.

Staff-Paymaster G. W. H. Maggs and Paymaster George Whitcroft, both retired, have been appointed for transport duties at home. This is the first occasion for a very long period of retired officers of their branch being utilised for other than naval hospitals, coastguard, and hydrographic departments, and indicates that the Admiralty have not a superfluity of either senior or junior accountant officers.

Colonel H. St. G. Schomburg's appointment as Commandant of the Chatham Division implies the retention of Colonel W. P. Wright as Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Royal Marine Forces. It would be no advantage for the latter officer to accept the post of Commandant, as he becomes Major-General in October next on the retirement of Major-General Munro, who, by the way, obtains the rank of Lieutenant-General when General Sir H. S. Jones retires in February of this year.

Major Charles Clarke, R.M.L.I., of the Revenge, and Captain R. H. J. Meister, of the Ramillies, will exchange appointments on the latter vessel becoming flagship of the rear-admiral, Mediterranean fleet, it being usual for a field officer to serve in, and obtain the advantages of, a vessel with a flag officer.

Captain R. L. Bayliff, R.M.L.I., who was under orders to embark in the Europa to command the Royal Marine forces taking passage to the Mediterranean, has been allowed to exchange on the foreign-service roster with Captain A. E. Rombulow Pearse, R.M.L.I., Plymouth Division.

Captains J. B. Pym and J. B. Finlaison, and Lieutenant R. H. Willis, R.M.L.I., have passed the examination for admission to the Ordnance College, Woolwich, with a view of qualifying for the Army Ordnance Department.

Lieutenant J. L. Jesse, R.M.L.I., of the Cæsar, has been allowed to join the Army Service Corps.

Lieutenant Percy Molloy, R.M.L.I., has been appointed to the Naval Intelligence Department at the Admiralty.

At the quarterly meeting of the directors of the Naval Medical Supplemental Fund, held on the 9th inst., W. H. Lloyd, Esq., M.D., Inspector-General, in the chair, the sum of £70 was distributed among the several applicants.

We have already given some particulars of the trials of the French submarine boat, Goubet No. 2, which are going forward at Toulon. The Yacht adds further details, remarking that the boat on the surface is handled with the greatest ease and has rapid manœuvring power. The first trial was to establish the habitability of the boat, which was found to be perfect. At nine o'clock in the morning she plunged to a depth of about 15ft., remaining attached by a cord of silk to a float upon the surface, and in this position without movement she remained until two o'clock in the afternoon. Three men were in the boat at the time, and no inconvenience was felt by them. In the second trial the Goubet plunged twice, and, on arriving at Balaguier, upon a given signal, disappeared for a third time. She had plunged just below the surface, and played hide-and-seek with the steam-boat which accompanied her. For twenty minutes those on the surface were scanning the water in all directions in order to discover the submarine, while the latter, with her optic tube above water, kept them in view the whole time. On the return to the port the Goubet proceeded at six knots, and in passing the Bouvines circled round twice upon herself and entered the arsenal by passing under the chains of the Shamrock. On another occasion the boat behaved extremely well in rough weather. The boat is to be provided with two torpedo-tubes. She has been constructed by private enterprise, but is being tried by the French Admiralty, and according to M. Duboc, who has written the account in the Yacht, the naval officers who have witnessed these first experiments are very well pleased with her performances.

On the other hand, some difficulties have occurred in the trials of the submersible boat Narval at Cherbourg, and the Sirène and the Triton of the same type have been retarded in consequence. The difficulty occurs in the plunging of the boat. Externally the hull resembles that of a torpedo-boat, and is strengthened to support the pressure of water at a great depth, while the space between the outer and inner casing is filled with water for the plunge. It is now found necessary to subdivide the shell of the boat, so that the introduction of water may be regulated methodically, and we believe this change will have to be introduced into all the boats of the Narval class. The correspondent of the Yacht at Cherbourg remarks in relation to these trials "that there is too great a tendency to exaggerate the importance of submarine and submersible boats, and that they are at present purely serviceable for coast defence."

General Jamont is paying a series of visits to the French coast defences. As is well known, under the curiously mixed system upon which the defences are administered, a large number of them are within the purview of the Minister of War and are to be occupied by military forces in case of hostilities. The France Militaire seems to attach a good deal of importance to the general's visit to Brest, which would scarcely seem to be a matter of mere routine, since our contemporary urges that it would have been far better to keep it secret, so that the attention of foreigners might not be attracted to what is going on. A further sum of money is to be expended by both the Naval and Military Departments upon the coast defences, and M. Lockroy, though out of office, is loudly declaring that a large vote is needed. M. de Lanessan, his successor in the Rue Royale, asks for 600,000,000f. for the coasts and naval bases, the expenditure of which is intended to be divided over a period of six years. Some of the French papers are very bitter in regard to this matter, and charge the Minister with want of patriotism in thus proposing to defer the completion of the work, and they ascribe his action to jealousy of his predecessor.

The first vessel to be constructed at the new Russian arsenal of Libau is a protected cruiser of 6,375 tons, which belongs to the programme of 1898-1904. The length will be 413ft. and the beam 53ft. 3in. The engines will be of 20,000 horse-power, and will be supplied by water-tube boilers of French make. A thin protective deck will extend over the whole area of the ship, and the armament will include twelve 6in. guns—two forward, two aft, and eight in casemates—as well as twelve of 2.9in. and eight of 1.8in., with five torpedo-tubes, of which three will be submerged.

The German Navy Budget for the year 1900 amounts in all to a total of 121,333,580 marks. The effective borne upon the estimates is 1,195 officers, 153 surgeons, and 28,204 men, being increases respectively of 77, 11, and 153. The vote for maintenance of ships and guns, for target practice, and for ordnance shows an increase of 1,400,000 marks. In the extraordinary budget a sum of 356,700,000 marks results from the application of the Navy Law authorising the existing programme, but out of this amount a total of 178,350,000 marks is spread over a period of three years. The figures show that the expenditure contemplated has not been fully made, a circumstance due chiefly to slower progress in ship-building than was anticipated. The special ship-building votes in the new estimates include the first charges for two battleships, one large armoured cruiser, two smaller cruisers, one gun-boat, and several torpedo craft.

The German annual Navy List has lately been published, giving particulars up to November 10. Six royal personages and 3 rear-admirals were à la suite of the Navy, and 3 princes of the Naval Infantry. Upon the active list were one admiral, 4 vice-admirals, 14 rear-admirals (including Prince Henry of Prussia, who has just been promoted), 46 captains, 19 frigate captains, 74 corvette captains or commanders, 188 captain-lieutenants, 288 lieutenants, and 200 sub-lieutenants, giving in all a total of 830 naval officers, or an increase of 56 upon the previous year.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Our recent reverses in South Africa have called forth a spirit of patriotic devotion throughout the British Empire which has in it much that is encouraging so far as the future of that Empire is concerned. That its citizens of every class should prove themselves ready to rush to arms to make good the failures of a policy which many of them condemn is a warning foreign nations will do well to lay to heart; whilst the proofs we are giving of ability to transport any number of men, any amount of material, to the most distant parts of the earth, is a guarantee to the colonies, now loyally sharing the troubles of the mother country, that in the hour of common danger they may count upon her aid and protection—an aid and protection they will, however, hardly need, since in the resistance which the Boers are opposing to the large forces we have put into the field may be read the successful defence Australia, New Zealand or Canada would make to the far smaller armies which any other European power could bring against them. Yet that patriotic devotion is in danger of aggravating the perils of the present hour. To throw into a poor country a heterogeneous mass of combatants, disciplined, semi-disciplined, or not disciplined at all, and expect that their numbers and enthusiasm will command victory, is to be blind to two obvious facts—the one, that the single-lined railways of South Africa, apart from their insecurity, are incapable of moving and feeding more than a limited number of troops; the other, that we do not possess, and, if we possessed, could not efficiently maintain, the transport of other kinds which might free us from dependence on those railways. The change that has been made in the supreme command can do nothing to alter these facts. Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener may be the best of military organisers, but they cannot double the lines of railway along which they will have to work, nor increase indefinitely the amount of animal transport they can employ; nor yet, to touch another point round which ignorant hopes are gathering, can they make our over-weighted cavalry horses, sick with a strange climate, strange food, strange flies, a match for the hardy, native-born horses of the lightly-accounted Boers.

These opinions may seem equivalent to a confession of impotence, and their logical outcome an immediate abandonment of a struggle in which, to use the words applied by Sir Henry Durand to all wars in Afghanistan, large armies must starve and small ones be overwhelmed; and certainly, if it were essential, as some people are busy proclaiming, that it be carried on to the bitter end, i.e., to the capture of Pretoria and the destruction of Boer independence, I do not see how we are to escape being impaled on one or other of the horns of that dilemma. There is, however, I am happy to say, no reason why we should go on to a bitter end when a wise one will better serve our legitimate purpose, which I take to be the re-establishment of peace throughout South Africa on a basis which shall secure fair treatment of Uitlanders and a reduction within moderate limits of the armaments of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, whilst leaving untouched the national existence which those two Republics are defending with such astonishing resolution. Were Ladysmith not in danger of starvation, I should say that that wise end is already in sight, since, by remaining in the positions we now occupy, we can compel the Boers to exhaust their strength and patience in a waiting game. Sooner or later they must fall back, for a nation cannot remain indefinitely under arms though an army can; and when once a retrograde movement, due to their own necessities, has begun, a disintegration of their military forces will follow. The relief of Ladysmith cannot, however, be safely delayed, and fortunately that task is not beyond our power, since the railway from Durban to Sir Redvers Buller's camp is entirely in our hands, and the distance from our sea base not so great as to call for a larger amount of animal transport than we can provide and maintain, however many the troops that may be required for the turning movement which alone can dislodge the Boers from their strong entrenchments. We must expect, however, that they will fall back upon some other position, carefully chosen and prepared beforehand, and that would be the point where the tactics I recommend should be applied.

To put my views into a single sentence—I believe that our chances of success lie in the exhaustion of our enemies, and that that exhaustion will set in with rapidity proportioned to the distance from their base at which we apply to them the strategy by which Wellington at Torres Vedras checked the advance of Massena's large army and then compelled it to retire utterly worsted, demoralised, and shorn of nearly half its numbers. But the success of even this strategy will depend upon the spirit in which we continue to conduct the war, and upon the amount of hope of generous treatment at its close, which we leave not only to the Dutch of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, but to those of Cape Colony, whose loyalty is being exposed to so severe and unnatural a trial. Were it not well, then, if the day that witnesses the landing at Cape Town of the two men to whom our Government have transferred the confidence which they so recently placed in Sir Redvers Buller should announce to the world our readiness to entertain reasonable proposals of peace, and our determination to eschew any solution of the South African difficulty which would condemn us to violate the principle of equal rights and liberties for all white men throughout South Africa for which we profess to be fighting?

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

Watch and Clock Makers.

Report.

"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch, No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the Discovery, and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactorily.—M.D., D.I.H., R.N."

(NEW REGULATIONS.)

Great prominence is now given to modern languages, 25 per cent. of the marks being assigned to colloquial knowledge. Candidates prepared abroad will therefore have a distinct advantage. We employ special teachers for colloquial practice in French and German out of hours.

Over FIFTY Recent Successes.
(Lists on application. No final failures up to date.)

Boarders live with Principal's family, which is German in language. Non-residents received.

TURKISH AND ARABIC.SCHOLARSHIPS, REWARDS.

Professor G. HAGOPIAN'S principal successes at the recent Government Examinations in Turkish, held on April 5, 1899, were Colonel T. E. Stephenson, commanding officer of the Essex Regiment, QUALIFIED INTERPRETER at FIRST TRIAL, with 667 marks, and on October 18, 1899, Major H. A. Curtis, R.A., QUALIFIED with 643; and in Arabic, on Oct. 20, 1898, Capt. H. R. Cook, R.A., who "passed" with 502.

FIFTEEN other officers were also exclusively prepared by him and passed as QUALIFIED INTERPRETERS in TURKISH with high marks.

Officers rapidly and effectively instructed in all branches, both orally and by correspondence.

NO FAILURES. Also tuition in HINDUSTANI, RUSSIAN, Persian, French, &c.

Distance offers no hindrance to success.

PROGRESS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

THE entrance of Lord Roberts and Kitchener on the theatre of war raised the curtain on the third act in the eventful drama passing before the gaze of the nation in South Africa. It is with mixed feelings that we contemplate the events of the pre-existing period. Gallant deeds have been so overshadowed by unexpected reverses that the remaining impression on the mind of many savoured to an uncomfortable degree rather of defeat than of victory, until Sir George White's gallant repulse of the Boers on the 6th inclined the balance in the right direction. It is most essential in following from day to day the varying incidents of the three-fold campaign now being carried on to keep a cool head. If there is no room for exultation over uninterrupted victory, there is at the same time no cause for despondency over serious defeat. We have suffered reverses, but not defeat. If to the east and west we have seen some 50,000 British soldiers blocked and checked in their progress by the mobile and entrenched Boers, we have also seen an equal or possibly a superior number of the enemy held inactive by their own operation. If the curtain fell in gloom when the British recoiled from the embattled hills of Colenso and Magersfontein, it rose again gloriously when the garrison of Ladysmith succeeded through an entire day in hurling back the Boer host from its entrenchments.

The lengthened inactivity of Sir Redvers Buller after the repulse at Colenso on December 15, notwithstanding the substantial increase of his force, and the absolute silence that has so mysteriously shrouded the part that was being played by Sir Charles Warren, are now explained. Information reached the War Office on Thursday that General Buller had crossed the Tugela, bent upon a forward movement for the relief of Ladysmith. The movements which resulted in the crossing of the river in two places seem to have been excellently planned. Lord Dundonald and his mounted men made a dash for Potgieter's Drift on the 10th inst. Next day, covered by the fire of the naval guns which had been brought into position on Alice Hill, near Swart Kop, the main force moved across the river and took up a position on a ridge of kopjes a couple of miles on the northern side. Almost simultaneously Sir Charles Warren forced the passage of a drift six miles further to the west of that crossed by Sir Redvers Buller. He, with all arms, is established on the far side and hopes to outflank the enemy.

The first step of the movement has been effectually made. The second will probably be a great battle at a position chosen by the Boers, most likely somewhere on the great rugged plateau south of Dewdrop. Sir Redvers Buller will no doubt strive to fight this battle at once. When Sir Charles Warren continues his flanking movement, he will threaten seriously Acton Homes and the Free Staters' line of retreat to their own country by Van Reenen's Pass. If the British left is flung across this road before the Harrismith men retreat to their own borders it will necessitate their retirement with the Transvaalers and crossing into their country by one of the more northerly passes. We know that the Free State burghers are dissatisfied with the conduct of the war, and if they suffered as severely in the attack on Ladysmith as there is every reason to believe, there is a probability that the very weak tie that holds the two Republics together may be brought to breaking strain, and that the Free Staters engaged in the siege of Ladysmith may turn their faces homewards, thoroughly disgusted at having been dragged into a war which has fallen with great severity upon them.

All must recognise now the wisdom of the decision to send Lord Roberts to South Africa, and thus give Sir Redvers Buller a free hand to deal with the position in Natal. It was on the 10th inst. that the new Commander-in-Chief of the Army in South Africa reached the Cape. On the morning of the day following Sir Redvers Buller occupied the south bank of the Tugela at Potgieter's Drift. The significant sequence of these two events suggests that the active operations of the relieving force in Natal had been deferred until Sir Redvers Buller communicated by wire with Lord Roberts, and knew that he was relieved of responsibility for what was proceeding in Cape Colony. The chief interest of the country will now be divided between the force in being under Sir Redvers Buller and that in process of formation in Cape Colony under the immediate orders of the veteran Commander-in-Chief. The force under Lord Methuen's command lies for the time being entrenched and blocked at Modder River. Should Kimberley be in no immediate danger of being starved out, it is probable that things will remain in statu quo at Modder River until relief to the invested garrison can be brought about by a new series of operations originating to the south of the Orange Free State. Assuming, as we now may, that the force in Natal is of sufficient strength for independent offensive action without further heavy reinforcements of British troops from home, the 6th, 7th, and 8th Divisions, with the mounted corps, should be at the disposal of Lord Roberts in Cape Colony for a bold forward movement against the Free State or such other action as his judgment may dictate. It is estimated that by the end of the first week in February some 27,000 additional troops should thus be assembled under his orders. This force would include one cavalry regiment, twelve battalions of regular infantry, seven battalions of Militia, sixty-six guns, and a considerable force of mounted infantry, but it would be exclusive of the large and varied mounted irregular corps in process of formation at home, in the colonies, and in India.

In one important direction continued efforts are required to give us the necessary strength. In all parts of the theatre of war the number of field guns is too small. A proportion of at least four per 1,000 fighting men has been generally accepted in modern times as the minimum; yet in this war, where a preponderance in artillery is so essential owing to the abnormal conditions that confront our troops, a proportion of even three per 1,000 is not attained. It is satisfactory to learn that all available naval field guns, both 15prs. and 12prs., are to be sent out to South Africa for the use of the Army. These guns are quick-firers. The former has, moreover, an effective range of 10,000yd. or more, and the latter a range nearly as long. The supply of these pieces, so superior to our existing field guns, is satisfactory even at this advanced hour, but the fact of such guns being in existence at once forces the pertinent question why the field artillery was left with an inferior weapon until war came upon the nation. In regular cavalry also we are too weak, and the unaccountable delay in the mobilisation of the additional brigade is disquieting. Is it a fact, as is suspected amongst military men, that the reservist system, which has been found so satisfactory with the infantry arm, has proved to be a failure more or less in the case of the mounted services? There would certainly seem to be fair grounds for fearing that it is so. A man passing some years of his life in civil employ becomes far more quickly out of training for mounted than for dismounted service, and the time required to render him again efficient in the riding school must inevitably cause serious delay in mobilisation. For years it has been pointed out that our Army is notoriously weak in the cavalry arm, and the system of seriously letting down its effective strength in time of peace, and relying upon a sudden influx of reservists from civil employment and untrained horses to bring the regiments up to war strength, is a makeshift arrangement fraught with danger. To meet the requirements of a modern war our cavalry regiments should be maintained at all times in a state of perfect readiness for active service, as in India. On the outbreak of war the reservists could be assembled at the regimental depôts, and go through a proper course of training in all mounted duties and exercises, in which they would again become proficient, before there would be a call for their services at the front to make good casualties.

With the powerful and mobile force that will soon be concentrated in Cape Colony Lord Roberts will find himself, no doubt, in a position to rapidly influence the entire situation. There will be work enough before him. Colesberg has to be cleared of the enemy and the way to the Orange River laid open; Stormberg has to be taken and General Gatacre's advance made feasible; the line from Naauwpoort to Stormberg has to be freed from the enemy at Steynberg and brought into the circuit of communication with De Aar; and, finally, relief has to be given to the beleaguered garrisons either by further detachments of troops to Natal and the western border or by a rapid descent upon Bloemfontein.

FIELD ARTILLERY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

THE man who knows by experience the terrible difficulties under which, thanks to our system of political control, the British soldier is compelled very often to fight, is, as a rule, very chary about accusing or listening to the accusations of the press against those engaged in the almost hopeless task of making bricks without straw. When, times out of mind, one has heard of the annual estimates going back to Pall-mall with item after item, strongly recommended by every responsible authority, ruled out in red ink by the Treasury, even when these erased items destroy the continuity of works on which the country is willing to spend thousands, one can only shrug one's shoulders and congratulate one's self that the Army at any rate is free from responsibility for the losses both of money and life which will probably be incurred. It is, however, a totally different matter when men's lives are sacrificed in action and the gravest possible risk of failure in a matter of Imperial policy is incurred. That our brave troops should have been sent out to South Africa deprived of the assistance of the one arm whose support, if properly afforded, will always carry them into the heart of the enemy's position at the lowest cost to life and limb is deeply to be deplored. Briefly, our guns have been sent to the front condemned to idleness and inefficiency at the very psychic moment of the whole fight, the two minutes that precede the assault, by want of "common shell."

A few words will be needed to make the situation clearer to the lay mind and bring home a full sense of the importance we attach to this deficiency. The assault of an enemy's position, the enemy being presumed equally well armed and equally stubborn with the assailant, can only succeed as a consequence of the preparatory action of the artillery. Steady troops with equal weapons ought to be able to beat off all conceivable frontal attacks made by infantry only, but the possession of superior artillery power has always rendered it possible to the assailant to reduce the opposing force to any condition of unsteadiness, previous to launching his attack, which he may have considered necessary, and for which time was available. But experience has shown, particularly of late years, when the distances between opposing forces has become so great, that this condition of unsteadiness is not of necessity of long duration, and that if any intermission in the act of preparation is allowed to take place the assaulting force may find the apparently lifeless lines of the defender manifest its active vitality in a most embarrassing manner. The Crimea and Plevna are cases very much in point. Now every infantry soldier has been taught to rely on the maintenance of this preparatory fire up to the very last moment, and as long as our guns, like all others, carried a fair proportion of "common shell" this support was assured to them, for with the absolute accuracy of modern field guns common shell could be fired with safety over the heads of the advancing infantry as long as the trajectory passed even 5ft. above them. With shrapnell this is no longer possible, for the best time fuse in existence cannot be relied on to burst its shell round after round within 50yd., and, moreover, to be effective each shell must be burst about 100yd. in front of its target, or the bullets have no room to spread.

Probably no battery commander would dare to continue his shrapnel when the trajectory of the shells passed less than 30ft. above the heads of the attacking infantry; but 30ft. vertically measured means a considerable delay in time to the assault, at least a couple of minutes, and these minutes a resolute enemy will know how to turn to good account. In a moment the deserted trenches will be alive again, and with the magazine rifle at present in use there is a possibility at any rate of pouring out a volume of fire which, delivered about horizontally, must sweep away any assaulting column in the world. It is at this point that, between well-matched foes, every assault has invariably failed; the essence of success has always lain in the maintenance of the artillery fire to the last, even if a few shells now and again did plump into the assailants. As far back as the storming of St. Sebastian it was only the fire of our gunners kept up over the heads of the storming column that swept the breach and rendered our entry certain, and if it was possible in those days of relatively inaccurate weapons to fire over the heads of one's own infantry, how much more possible must it be nowadays?

Nothing would be simpler than to find the man who signed the order which has thus deprived our gunners of the power of supporting their comrades at the critical moment; but, after all, would he be the proper victim? Or may it not be that here again the Army is now suffering for the sins of those who have long since passed away, though a few may still remain? Did the infantry ever insist on this maintenance of artillery fire up to the very last moment? We are afraid that the answer must be in the negative; for as with few exceptions their war experience had been entirely gained against Asiatics and savages, our generals had no idea what the value of artillery fire against an equal foe really can be. Whilst the Germans who had fought at St. Privat and the Russians who had been at Plevna were insistent in season and out of season for the necessity at all risks for the gunners to rain shells up to the last moment at all costs into the enemy's position, ours, scared by a single misadventure in China, where some Armstrong lead-jacketed shells stripped badly, had laid it down as a principle in our drill books that guns should not fire over infantry at all.

And there the matter has remained, neither the infantry nor artillery generals realising the all-importance of the maintenance of fire to the very last moment, and each throwing the blame on the other whenever the question was mooted. If one asked the gunner, his reply was always, "Oh! the infantry do not like it, they will not stand it"; if one asked the infantryman, it was, "Oh! my dear fellow, it cannot be thought of; the gunners are such bad shots"—forgetting that the guns and the shooting have both improved since the days of the Crimea and China. And the result we have already seen in South Africa, and shall probably see again when the decisive fighting really begins—the Boers lying low under cover till the rain of shrapnell ceases and then springing up to receive our assaulting forces at the shortest and most deadly ranges with a cool and deliberate fire—fire ten times more deadly than the long-range fire in which in the absence of artillery fire they and all other troops are so prone to indulge. Theory may be opposed to the use of common shell, but letters from the front from officers of all arms make it only too evident that in the matter of artillery our generals have been placed at a most serious disadvantage. We possess, as all are agreed, the best of gunners, and they have played their part admirably on every occasion, but they have not been able to do all that was expected of them for a very simple reason—they have been outmatched in the matter of shells.

Army Notes.

If the critics, whose indignation is so hot against the War Office, would only make practical suggestions in the direction of reform instead of wasting their energies in pointing out the obvious, something might be done to benefit our system. They are disgusted with the present system, but they cannot propose anything better. Mr. Spenser Wilkinson would like the Cabinet to include an expert military member, but he neglects to tell us how that unhappy minister would make his knowledge felt so as to influence the Government's decisions. The fact of the matter is our political system is responsible for War Office incompetence, not the organisation of that periodically misused institution. "The War Office must be thoroughly reformed" cry indignant critics, unconsciously echoing their fathers and forefathers; but we have our doubts, and so has the War Office. When we have a system which is responsible in more than name the shortcomings we see plainly only in the hour of danger may be remedied. Until that time arrives we must be content to suffer the constitutional defects of our constitutional virtues. There never was a war minister, we venture to say, who was more conscientiously anxious to better the condition of our defences than Lord Lansdowne. He has done much in the direction of improvement and he has been well supported both by Mr. Brodrick and Mr. Wyndham. The Army is quite ready to admit that Lord Lansdowne has been a good War Minister, for the reforms he has introduced have been for the most part wise and well considered. The break-up of the Royal Artillery cannot, of course, be put in this category; but was Lord Lansdowne really responsible for this most foolish measure? And are the mistakes—and they have been many and great—which have to be associated with the opening stages of the present Boer War those of Lord Lansdowne only? An attempt is being made, even on the part of those who ought to know better, to make Lord Lansdowne, as head of the War Office, responsible for all that has gone wrong since we took the field in South Africa. We find that there exists among soldiers a commendable feeling of sympathy for the Minister for War in all the circumstances of the situation, for the general impression among them is that he has been more sinned against than sinning, and it is a natural feeling, as the Army knows well, that the present War Minister has been the first to recognise that faults of system existed and take steps to remedy at least some of the most glaring of them. Those who are too ready to abuse Lord Lansdowne, for the criticism in some quarters is little better than abuse, do so from ignorance of facts, which is much to be regretted. The system which the Minister has to administer may be a radically bad one, but we deny emphatically that the Minister himself has been a bad Secretary of State for War when compared with those who have preceded him in office.

It is to be hoped that the Government intend to act with vigour in the matter of reinforcements; yet there are ominous signs that their energies are being devoted to the meaningless subtleties of party strife rather than to the realities of war in South Africa. The more men sent to the front within the next two months the sooner will hostilities come to an end. Then there are eventualities which it will not do to forget. How can we tell that in six months time another field force may not be required? Nevertheless, there are no preparations being made to meet such an emergency. Moreover, every day our forces are locked up in South Africa increases the danger of foreign complications and operates disastrously on trade, a reference to which appeared in the Czar's Rescript. True the Navy is our bulwark of safety, but we also need effective means of defence within these realms. Cavalry, artillery, and infantry are being sent to the front in such numbers that the prospect of foreign complications becomes a serious matter. Surely Militia and Volunteer regiments, and other means of defence, should be organised without loss of time, so that, should the worst happen, we are not unprepared. Why not call up more Militia battalions? Officers and men are anxious to do military duty. It is absurd to deny them the chance of doing so at such a time. We are only running serious risks by such an insane policy.

It is an excellent idea to raise a South African contingent in connection with the Imperial Yeomanry. It is a practical recognition of the fact that English Volunteer regiments must be stiffened with Volunteers who know the country. There are hundreds of men with colonial experience in war and peace who would be only too glad to enlist, and of these many have served in South African wars or as troopers in the Mounted Police. That such men can do valuable work in conjunction with cavalry and in harassing the enemy every day brings forth fresh evidence. General Babington's raid into the Free State was as admirably conceived as it was carried out. The destruction of their property is the only way to bring home to the Boers the realities of a war into which they rushed headlong. General French has also been successful with similar tactics, which are better calculated to demoralise the enemy than a pitched battle. He gives them no rest; he follows them from kopje to kopje, allowing them no time to entrench; he makes them nervous for their communications. In these circumstances it is disquieting to learn that the 4th Cavalry Brigade, which was to have sailed last week, is not to be despatched until further orders. If the situation in South Africa showed a brilliant change for the better, so that the need for reinforcements were no longer pressing, there would be no ground for complaint, but as things are to despatch the "Lord Mayor's Own" and the Imperial Yeomanry, and to keep back trained and seasoned soldiers, is a mistake. Even should our generals win great victories in Natal and elsewhere the resistance of the Boers is not likely to break down all at once. When they are driven within their own territory they will continue their guerilla tactics with a stubbornness of which only Teutonic races are capable. Hence Lord Roberts and General Buller will want all the mounted troops they can get, and to keep them back now is only to prolong the struggle indefinitely. When the guns once begin to fire economy is the costliest extravagance.

The wordy warfare of the guns is being prosecuted with almost as much vigour at home as the war is in South Africa. From private letters received by the friends of officers and men at the front, and the testimony of correspondents as revealed in London journals of standing, it is clear that the Boer artillery, manned by foreigners, has proved superior to our own. It is idle to quote Lord Wolseley's words to the effect that our field artillery is equal to the field artillery of any other of the great Powers. We are not fighting a great Power just now, but the Dutch Republics, whose armaments were imported from the continent of Europe. The discovery we are making on the South African veldt would therefore have come home to us more disastrously, there is reason to suppose, on a European battlefield. As a matter of fact the field artillery of Russia, to mention no other, is superior to ours, whatever it may have been when Lord Wolseley used the words which have been so widely quoted to reassure the public mind on the question. Lord Dunraven, in a letter to the Times, has put the matter in a nutshell of common sense. He says it is of no consequence whether or not the guns used by the Boers are field arms or guns of position. What we have to do is to beat them with guns of the same class. If they can move them about from point to point so can we; if they can use them effectively in the field so can we. There has been too much red tape about this war already without allowing it to strangle one of the great arms of the Service, as some would apparently desire. When we act on the assumption that war is a game which must be adapted to conditions, not the conditions to the game, we shall emerge from the deadlock in South Africa. If the Boers have discovered that guns of position may be moved about with advantage, the sooner we also discover it the better, definitions of field artillery to the contrary. We are most ready at all times to recognise the difficulties which our War Office has to face, but when ill-advised writers come forward in defence of red tape it is not to be wondered at that practical men lose patience.

We have at length awoke to the fact that the British Army, composed as all European armies are mainly of infantry, has been called upon to subdue an army of horsemen. This alone is sufficient to account for the vastness of the forces that have been hurried to the front since the first embarkation took place on October 20. It accounts also for all the difficulties that have arisen locally in the conduct of the war and the slowness of the progress made. In personal prowess the British soldier has proved himself to be superior to the Boer; in the efficiency of his rifle he is on a par with his foe, and in its use he has learnt to be fairly proficient. The Boers have an undoubted advantage in the superior range of their guns, but the heaviest losses of the British have been due far more to the rifles than to artillery. In all our technical equipments we are immeasurably superior. But we lack that without which the most perfect equipments become of no telling importance, namely, mobility. The superior mobility of the Boers will, if not neutralised, prolong indefinitely their power of resistance; and the only way by which that advantage may be neutralised is to render our forces equally mobile, so far as that is possible. We may not, perhaps, aspire to the possession of an army of horsemen, but our constant aim and endeavour must be to approach that ideal, at least for the purposes of this war, as closely and as speedily as is possible. This power of rapid movements tells everywhere with equal force, whether in advance, in retreat, in concentration, or dispersion; in the battle also, whether in attack or in defence. That the physical character of the country does not reduce its potency may be seen from the fact that it has shown itself equally advantageous in the comparatively open veldt over which General French's mounted troops are in daily motion, and among the crags and mountains that abound where General Gatacre's less mobile troops have to face not only an active foe, but also unusual difficulties presented by the ground. Indeed, anomalous as it may seem, it is perhaps in such a country as the latter, where war with the Boers becomes one of guerilla bands, that the colonial rifleman mounted on his hardy and sure-footed pony is most formidable. Thus armed and mounted he becomes almost ubiquitous, and eludes his foe with the swiftness and dexterity of the wild game of his own hills.

The acceptance by the War Office of the services of a number of Militia battalions on active service in South Africa is to be commended. The constitutional force has been for years so sadly neglected that officers and men will rejoice at the prospect of doing something to prove their worth; not that any evidence was wanting of their devotion to duty and readiness to play their part in a national emergency. The Militia has ever been ready to do its duty; its soldierly qualities have been tried many times and it has never been found wanting when called upon to support the Regular Army in periods of war. It has become the fashion in some quarters to underrate its value, but those who do this are very ignorant of our military history. What the force did in the earlier years of the present century during the Crimean War, Indian Mutiny, and as recently as 1884-85, it will do again. The battalions embodied sixteen years ago earned the admiration of all who were associated with them; the crisis then was not of a very pressing nature, but the few battalions called up covered themselves with credit. But the service has laboured under such serious disadvantages, owing to a miserable policy of official cheese-paring, that in some districts recruiting has suffered seriously. The fault, however, can scarcely be attributed to want of enthusiasm on the part of the personnel, for officers have appealed again and again to be treated seriously, but their appeals have fallen on deaf ears at the War Office. A few representative battalions are now to be given their chance of showing the stuff of which they are made, and we feel convinced that all ranks of the units on their way to the Cape will well maintain the credit of their service, one which could be made anything of if only those who are responsible for the administration of our Army could be brought to realise that our land forces are inadequate to the duties they have to perform. We have muddled on so long in military affairs that many earnest Militia officers have lost heart and laid aside the sword. But there is every indication now that the taxpayers have grasped the situation and are determined to force the pace, realising as they do that our military position is not what it ought to be. When the present war is over, there will be a general stocktaking of our resources and all services will benefit. The voices which have cried so ineffectually in the wilderness will then perhaps have their hearing. That the Militia battalions going to the front will acquit themselves well we feel convinced. To those who have to suffer the disappointment of not being selected for the duties of the field, we can only say be of good cheer, the days of official muddling are nearing their end, for the British taxpayer has had his eyes opened to the dangers of unpreparedness, and the British taxpayer once aroused is not easily reconciled. It will not be enough for him in future to be told that all is for the best in the best of all possible armies. He is a thoughtful man, his confidence has been rather severely shaken, and he is not likely to rest satisfied until convinced that military efficiency is not being sacrificed for the purposes of popular budgets.

The first contingent of the City of London Volunteers received a most enthusiastic send-off on Saturday last. And the demonstration was deserved for the action of the civic authorities in raising this corps, and the action, too, of the officers and men who have gone forth to fight their country's battles, mark an epoch in our history as a nation. It was fitting and right that it should be recognised that the new departure was approved by a people who are sometimes twitted with being shopkeepers only. The moral effect of these patriotic demonstrations will be all for good. In the first place, it shows that our Volunteer force is a reality, and it cannot fail, therefore, to strengthen enormously the bond of sympathy which should exist between the soldier and the taxpayer. It should, and we believe will, tend greatly to increase the popularity of the Army, and it will assist the Government materially when the moment arrives for introducing those reforms which all classes of the community are now demanding. It should cause employers of labour to look with a more friendly eye on the Militiaman and so benefit that force, and it will, at the same time—and this is the most important point of all perhaps—cause the upper and middle classes to regard the question of national defence in a different way to what it is to be feared they have hitherto done. One only has to go to Oxford and Cambridge to realise how deplorably bad the example has been which those have set who should be the leaders in all matters of defence. An old Adjutant of a University Volunteer Corps assures us that, having kept the most careful records, he finds that but 5 per cent. of those who leave the University associate themselves with the Auxiliary forces once their University course is over. Such a state of things is simply deplorable. Our correspondent goes farther and states that from his experience there have hitherto been no greater enemies of the Militia and Volunteers than the young men who have passed through the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. The praiseworthy martial enthusiasm of the Volunteers who have left and are leaving for South Africa ought to put to shame those who, never having taken the trouble to bear arms themselves, ridicule the praiseworthy martial enthusiasm of those who do. We trust the day is not far distant now when men of this stamp will be scouted. No proper-minded man or woman living under the rule of our most gracious Sovereign can have sympathy with those who play a part so contemptible. We should like to think that our correspondent takes an exaggerated view, but we grieve to have to say that each day produces fresh evidence in support of what he says.

There are a great many anomalies in our system of Army rank. This is especially the case with regard to major-generals. We have not a sufficient number of these to command brigades, their proper function in the event of the ordinary requirements of peace being exceeded. Yet there are a certain number at present unemployed. It may be assumed that no colonel is promoted to the rank of major-general unless fit to be entrusted with the command of a brigade in the field; yet, though major-generals are available to a certain extent, the bulk of our brigades are commanded by colonels with the temporary rank of major or brigadier-general. Even in time of peace many of the officers commanding bodies of troops equivalent to divisions or brigades are colonels with temporary rank. Matters will be much worse under the new arrangement, by which, beginning with 1901, no colonel will be promoted unless to fill a vacancy in a command, for then on the formation of an expeditionary force every brigade will be commanded by a colonel with the temporary rank of major-general. This is an inconvenient and objectionable practice. It is most undesirable that when a battalion is going on service there should be a change of commanding officers. Again, it renders favouritism more easy; finally, it places an officer given the temporary rank in an anomalous position. To-day he is a major-general, to-morrow he may be only a colonel. It may be said that if these temporary major-generals do well they will be confirmed in the rank; but by this means the whole system will be dislocated and mischief will be done in every way. What we ought to do is to have an establishment sufficient for peace commands, with a surplus of from twelve to twenty to meet the requirements of an expeditionary force. The new system, it seems to us, is about as bad as bad possibly could be, and will result in endless discontent, for much of which there will doubtless be a justification.

There are a number of major-generals, officers on the active list, who are yearning for employment, and there are three brigades at Aldershot to all interests and purposes vacant, to say nothing of other appointments elsewhere. Cannot some of these old officers be provided for, or are they all doomed to the same cruel fate of removal to the retired list? It would be an insult to the profession of arms to say that all the officers in the category of the unemployed are unfit to command brigades on the home establishment. Yet, unless they are held to be so, how comes it that they are left year after year on the shelf? One only has to run one's eye down the pages of the Army List to find any number of earnest, good soldiers for whom no places have been found. The opportunity now presents itself of providing billets for some of them, and it might well be taken advantage of, even if it were necessary to enforce conditions in view of the pressing claims of those who will ere long, it is to be hoped, be returning home from South Africa with the laurels of war. All that the officers to whom we allude desire, as we understand it, is to be treated with common justice. But, as they say, there is a disposition in some quarters to deny them even this, for no other reason that can be assigned than that they have served their country faithfully and find themselves where they are.

It has hitherto been considered impossible to fire dynamite from an ordinary gun with an ordinary charge of powder. Those who are accustomed to handle the explosive can easily understand the reason, and to those for whom the properties of dynamite are hidden mysteries it need only be said that the "touchiness" of the compound is such that, under ordinary circumstances, it would explode in the barrel of the gun and blow the weapon to fragments. Many attempts have been made to solve this difficulty, and many systems of solving it have been heard of at various times. Most of these systems have relied upon compressed air for their propelling force, but with this no length of range could be attained. Other systems have used gunpowder, but have so deadened down the dynamite with camphor or other material that it has been quite inert; in fact, shells loaded with mud would have been quite as effective. It has been reserved to an Australian to completely solve the problem of firing safely and effectively from any ordinary gun, with any ordinary powder, shells charged not only with dynamite, but with blasting gelatine, a much more vigorous explosive standing in relation to dynamite as 106 to 81. Not only this, but the same inventor has devised a method of projecting rifled shells from smooth-bore guns with all the advantages of those fired from rifled cannon, and the additional ones of lightness and longevity of gun, cheapness and expedition of manufacture, greater range and penetration, and greater mobility. The inventor's claims are by no means visionary, as something like 250 shells have already been fired without one "premature," and to the astonishment of many sceptical witnesses, military and civil, who have been present at the experiments. A demonstration of both inventions is to be given in this country immediately.

Medical officers are asking why the services of officers of their corps brought back to employment from retired pay, especially those retired after twenty years' service, are not utilised for medical and surgical needs in South Africa. Article 487 of the Pay Warrant, 1897, states distinctly that the Secretary of State for War may, when he thinks fit, employ under such conditions as he shall from time to time determine officers who have retired from the Army. Surely these officers retired after twenty years are more eligible for employment on active service than civil surgeons. It is to be regretted that retired medical officers with experience of active service who are willing to proceed to South Africa should be compelled to serve only at home stations. The employment of some of these qualified officers would be attended with benefit to the Service. Indeed, we hear that the War Office may give authority for the selection of a few. We trust the rumour is well founded.

Out of evil good sometimes comes. The programme of the session of the Canadian Parliament, which will open on February 1, will include a proposal that the Government should pay the Canadian contingent in full during service in South Africa, as well as adopt measures to definitely determine Canada's responsibility in the defence of the Empire. The telegram goes on to say that both proposals are received with warm approval throughout the Dominion.

We are requested to state that the lecture delivered by the late General Sir George Chesney on "English Genius and Army Reorganisation" has, by special request, been reprinted, and appears in the January number of the Journal of the Royal United Service Institution. Non-members of the institution can obtain it on payment of 2s.

We are fully in accord with several correspondents who suggest that the War Office would do much to make the Service popular just now by promoting deserving non-commissioned officers to the commissioned ranks. They would thus provide regiments and battalions on active service with experienced officers and at the same time reward merit. To complete the establishment of officers of units proceeding to South Africa the military authorities have been at their wits' end. Immature lads from Sandhurst who have not completed the prescribed course, and Militia officers who have failed to pass the qualifying examination have been drafted into battalions in hopeless fashion of confusion, but during the whole period of the war there has not been a single promotion from the ranks. It would be a libel on the British Army to say that there are not at the present moment non-commissioned officers fully qualified to hold commissions. Many of them are practically performing in action the duties of officers. This trial in battle is the highest test of a soldier. The policy of the War Office has been to draw on the future in a rather reckless manner. To make promotions from the ranks at the end of the campaign will, to a great extent, be an illusory reward; those then promoted will find themselves, both on the list and in point of age, junior to lads who have been brought in under an undue relaxation of the ordinary rules. They will be unfairly handicapped from the start. In the Crimean campaign the first commissions were dated from November 5—Inkerman day. Brigadier-General MacDonald, now at the head of the Highland Brigade, was promoted 2nd Lieutenant from Colour-Sergeant on January 8, 1880, for distinguished conduct in the field in the previous month. These are precedents that should be followed. A commanding officer writing to us from the front on this subject says: "I have in my battalion at least three young non-commissioned officers, all of whom I would gladly take as 2nd Lieutenants. There services would be invaluable just now. But red tape says 'No; we will fill the vacancies by the appointment of Sandhurst cadets.' It is no use anyone protesting officially, for it only results in a severe rap over the knuckles. I am sure, however, that every intelligent man will agree with me that a great mistake is being made, to say nothing of the injury which the present want of system is bound to do to recruiting." We fully endorse the views of our correspondent.

THE MILITIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Notwithstanding the excitement caused by the recent military fever, I have been greatly struck with the dignified attitude taken by the Militia as a whole. I am sorry to say, however, that during the last week or so I have seen one or two efforts in the direction of self-advertisement which appear to me quite unworthy the traditions of the oldest military force in this country. Battalions ordered to be embodied, whether for the front, home service, or foreign stations, have gone about their business in a quiet and undemonstrative manner, which I venture to believe is characteristic of the Militia. One is therefore the more sorry to see such sentences as, "We understand that every officer and man of the 7th Bata. the Blankshire Regiment has volunteered his services for the front, but in consequence of one of the Regular battalions being at home the War Office authorities are unable to avail themselves of their services"; because it is tolerably obvious that information of this kind emanates from some member of the battalion, for which he is endeavouring to obtain a little fleeting notoriety. I sincerely trust that Militia officers who are tempted in this direction will remember the lines written by Rudyard Kipling of the general at the front:—

"And he doesn't advertise, do yer, Bobs?"

As my battalion, like most others, has been making strenuous efforts to go to South Africa I am unable to affix my name to this effusion, but I enclose my card, and am

MEDICAL ARRANGEMENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In the medical arrangements for the field force in South Africa I find the following: "The senior medical officer, Royal Army Medical Corps, in each brigade whether attached to a regimental or medical unit, will act as senior medical officer of his brigade." Now there are in each brigade, including its medical units, 11 medical officers at least; and in the varying conditions of field service they will be frequently changing. One must, therefore, pity the brigadier, who will never know from one day to another who will be his senior medical officer. This will be bad for the brigade and inconvenient for the general. All this may be necessary under the present procedure, where the senior medical officer can alone issue instructions to his juniors, but why not permit the brigadier-general to place one of the doctors on his staff to deal by "his order" with all matters medical and sanitary? The seniority of the doctor will then be a matter of no importance. This system, too, would be in accordance with the spirit of paragraph 2080 Queen's Regulations. MILES.

The funeral of Major-General Hale Prior took place at Lichfield on Saturday afternoon with military honours. General Prior was very much respected in Lichfield, and all business in the city was suspended for the time being, while the bells of the parish church tolled and the blinds of all private houses were drawn. The troops at Whittington Barracks, supplemented by Volunteers from the town and surrounding districts, attended. The body was borne on a gun-carriage. A special service was held at the cathedral, and was attended by the Mayor and Corporation in state and by the members of the South Staffordshire Hunt. The Rev. Canon Lonsdale officiated, and the bishop of the diocese read the lessons. From the cathedral the body was conveyed to the church of St. Chad, where the interment took place. The chief mourners were the son and daughter and two brothers (Major-General Upton Prior and Lieut.-Colonel Prior). The funeral was attended by a large number of officers, and the streets through which the procession passed were crowded.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

Saturday, Jan. 13.

The Governor of Natal sent to Sir George White a telegram conveying the congratulations of Natal on the successful repulse of the Boers from Ladysmith and the admiration of the colonists for the noble behaviour of the troops there throughout the siege. Sir George White replied thanking the Governor for his kind telegram, and said that the message had much gratified the garrison, which rejoiced to think that it had rendered good service to Natal, a province which had shown such devotion to Imperial interests and given the garrison so splendid a contingent, with whom they held it an honour to fight as comrades.

Telegrams received from Colesberg giving Boer commander's account of disaster to 1st Batn. Suffolk Regiment:—

"After desultory fighting throughout the entire week, a most determined attack was made yesterday morning (Jan. 6) by the Suffolk Regiment on the Boer position on a range of hills situate to the north of this town, the Boer positions on the south of the town being at the same time subjected to a heavy artillery fire. The attack of the Suffolks failed, and the regiment sustained heavy losses in their vain attempt to storm the Boer trenches. Col. Watson and five officers were killed. The defending force consisted of a detachment of the Johannesburg Police, of whom Lieut. Marais and two others were killed. I have just been over the battlefield. The British losses were very severe. I counted over 50 killed, besides which there were many wounded. Eight officers and 94 men of the Suffolk Regiment were taken prisoners. Capt. Thomson, one of the prisoners, informed me that Col. Watson was among the killed. Lieut. White was dangerously wounded. Among the wounded were Lieut. Wilkins, Lieut. Carey, Capt. Brown, Capt. Brett, Lieut. Allen, and Lieut. Butler. The attack was most gallantly conducted, Col. Watson leading, but the storming party were met on reaching the summit of the ridge by a withering fire from the Mausers, by which the advance was promptly checked. Col. Watson's body was discovered surrounded by the bodies of his men, 27 corpses lying within a radius of 20 yd. The fighting was all over by noon, the attack being repulsed on all sides. The burgher losses were eight killed and 17 wounded."

The account of the fighting at Ladysmith on the 6th inst. published by the Boer commander states the total losses on his side were 54 killed and 96 wounded. It is stated that though the burghers succeeded in gaining possession of most of the British positions on the western side of the Platrand, they were finally obliged to retire from most of the ground they occupied in consequence of the determined gallantry of the British troops, who won back every inch of ground at the point of the bayonet, and could not be deterred from pressing forward by anything against them. The Gordon Highlanders, Devonshire Regiment, Manchester Regiment, King's Royal Rifles, and colonial forces are specially mentioned as having behaved so heroically that there was no facing them.

The 9th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, the first Irish Militia regiment to leave for the front, embarked at Queenstown in the Nile. The battalion, 695 strong, out of a total of 700, received a great send-off. The enthusiasm of the public, it is said, knew no bounds, and the men, a splendid body, were in high spirits at the prospect, as they put it, of "showing the stuff" of which the Militia is made.

The first portion of the City of London Imperial Volunteers, consisting of the mounted infantry contingent, under Col. Cholmondeley, embarked at Southampton. The march through London in the early morning was attended by a display of popular enthusiasm. They were conveyed in two trains from Nine Elms to Southampton, where the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and several prominent members of the Corporation proceeded to bid them good-bye. The civil party were entertained at luncheon by Sir F. Evans, M.P., and Sir Donald Currie, M.P. Responding to the toast of the "City Corporation," the Lord Mayor described the occasion as an historic one as it established once and for all the character of the Volunteer force. The Volunteers sailed later in the day in the Garth Castle and the Briton, Col. Cholmondeley, London Rifle Brigade (late Captain Rifle Brigade), being in command. The Prince of Wales sent an inspiring message which was read by the Lord Mayor, who addressed the troops on taking leave of them.

A special Army Order issued giving the conditions under which the services of Royal Engineers (Volunteers) are to be accepted for active service, viz., a carefully selected section of one officer and 25 non-commissioned officers and men to be raised from each Volunteer Engineer corps (Fortress), the 2nd Cheshire (Railway) Engineers being permitted to raise two such sections. The sections to be attached to units of Royal Engineers at or about to proceed to the front. Every Volunteer to enlist for one year or for the war.

The Duke of Cambridge intimated his willingness to accept the presidency of the committee of the special corps of Imperial Yeomanry for service at the front, composed of gentlemen who pay all their own expenses, for which applications for enrolment have flowed in during the week.

An offer of Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal to raise and maintain in the field a force of 400 mounted men accepted by the British Government.

Sunday, Jan. 14.

Telegram posted at War Office before midnight from Lord Roberts:—

"Methuen's cavalry reconnaissance returned Jan. 11. Went 25 miles into Orange Free State. Country clear of enemy with exception of patrols. Enemy all quiet at Modder River. French made reconnaissance round enemy's left flank Jan. 10. Advanced from Sluimger's Farm Jan. 11 with cavalry and Royal Horse Artillery to bombard the Boer laager to the east of Colesberg Junction, but was unable to outflank enemy. Reconnaissance of cavalry and mounted infantry pushed north of Bastard's Nek and examined country to north of ridge. Gatacre no change. All well at Mafeking Dec. 28."

The Central News correspondent at Cape Town wrote that Commandant de Villiers, of the Free State forces, was killed in the fighting round Ladysmith on the 6th inst. He was well known at the Cape and was widely esteemed. He had no sympathy with the parties of President Kruger and President Steyn. He would certainly have been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Free State forces but for his known friendliness to England. He did not like the war, and would gladly have seen a settlement, which he maintained would have been best for the Republics.

Zoutpansdrift, in the Free State, north of the Orange River, stated in a telegram despatched on the 12th inst. to have been occupied on the 6th inst. by Gen. Wood with a force of all arms, a post being thus established in the enemy's country for the first time in the campaign. Communication between the banks of the river maintained by means of a pontoon.

Monday, Jan. 15.

By Gen. French's orders a daring reconnaissance was successfully carried out by a force of cavalry and artillery under Major Allenby, Inniskilling Dragoons, who thoroughly explored the country between the camp and the enemy's position on the Free State frontier. The little force penetrated as far as the waggon bridge on the Orange River. There they found the enemy's laager, and our guns at once opened fire at long range. The shells repeatedly burst in the enemy's position. The Boers, though in force, did little in the way of reply. They were evidently completely taken by surprise. Major Allenby, having obtained all the information he was sent to gather, returned safely to camp without a single casualty.

The Boers at Rensburg attempted during the morning to take a hill occupied by the New Zealand Volunteers and a company of the 1st Batn. Yorkshire Regiment, but were repulsed at the point of the bayonet, leaving 21 killed on the field and many wounded. The New Zealanders behaved with signal gallantry, being well supported by the Yorkshire Regiment, who rushed forward with a cheer and sent the enemy flying in all directions.

A telegram from Durban said:—

"A recent arrival here from Bloemfontein, via Pretoria, states that the general opinion is that the fighting will practically be over when the British cross the Orange Free State border in force. The Free Staters are sick of the war into which they feel that they were trapped. Numbers have returned to Bloemfontein vowing they will not return unless they are forced to do so. It is believed to be an easy matter for either Gen. French or Lord Methuen to march on Bloemfontein."

The special correspondent of the Standard telegraphed from Colesberg:—

"Col. Porter, of the Carabiniers, commanding the mounted troops, including the New Zealanders and New South Wales Lancers, has caused the enemy to leave one kopje after another. The plucky and hazardous movements of the colonials have completely nonplussed the enemy, who are not accustomed to their irregular method of fighting and their determined gallantry. Rimington's Scouts report that a small party of their body eluded the Boer pickets, entered Norval's Pont, and obtained valuable information. Gen. French and Col. Porter do not know how highly to speak of the good work of the colonials, who, though knowing no fear, proceed always with the utmost caution. Their work is a revelation."

Lord Roberts telegraphed during afternoon that "Gen. French sent out on Saturday two squadrons, two companies of mounted infantry, and two guns to shell the road bridge at Colesberg. The force returned to camp yesterday morning after having accomplished its object. There were no casualties. Position of Lord Methuen and Gen. Gatacre unchanged."

Foreign Military Attachés, accompanied by Col. Ivor Herbert, C.B., left Durban for Cape Town to join Lord Roberts's staff.

Telegram from Mafeking received by native runner, dated the 6th inst., "Well here."

Central News correspondent telegraphed: "I hear on authority which is worthy of the highest credence that there is enough ammunition at Pretoria to last for three years."

Telegram from India stated that Col. Lumsden was receiving liberal offers of support from every side for his corps to be known as Lumsden's Horse. Steps being taken in Upper India to form a fresh corps 500 strong, the recruits providing their horses and accoutrements, and the Government only being asked to furnish rifles and a free passage by sea.

Remounts from the Argentine landed at Cape Town to-day, said to be admirable, and have given great satisfaction.

The Indian Government consented to send the guns and equipment for three field batteries of 15prs., and also three corps of native transport drivers and muleteers (about 400 in all), under British officers.

An addition of 110 men made to City of London Imperial Volunteers, bringing the strength up to 1,510.

Tuesday, Jan. 16.

A reconnaissance in force made under Lord Methuen towards Brow's Drift, Modder River. Our artillery opened fire in the afternoon and shelled the enemy's trenches until sundown. The enemy fired five shells in reply, but they proved ineffective. Our infantry advanced to within some hundred yards of the enemy's trenches and fired several volleys, failing, however, to draw the Boer fire. No casualties on our side. The marksmanship of our artillery said to have been splendid.

A party of 19 Australian lancers on patrol duty was surprised by the Boers, it is believed through the treachery of a Dutch farmer. They had been scouting in the neighbourhood of Norval's Farm, and were returning to camp when a party of 60 Boers sought to cut them off. The lancers immediately made for an adjacent kopje, intending to hold it against the enemy until they were relieved. When they reached the kopje, however, they found that another party of Boers was in possession, and the unfortunate Australians were thus between two fires. The enemy proceeded to shoot the lancers' horses, though three men managed to break through and reach camp safely with the news. Six others came in afterwards, having evaded the enemy all night by lying low. Of the remaining two were killed and eight taken prisoners. Another patrol visited the spot the following morning, and found one of the party dead and one wounded, the rest having been taken prisoners. Four dead Australian horses and seven dead Boer horses were lying on the ground.

A demonstration in force was made by Lord Methuen from Modder camp. The attack was directed against the enemy's left flank, and was principally confined to artillery. The enemy was discovered in great strength with reinforcements coming from Jacobsdal. There were no casualties on our side.

Official announcement issued at the War Office just before midnight to effect that there was "no fresh news from seat of war."

The 3rd Batn. South Lancashire Regiment sailed from Liverpool in the City of Rome with 824 for the front, receiving an ovation both at Preston and the port of embarkation. The enthusiasm of the crowd said to have been unprecedented.

Five thousand men up to to-day had attested for the Imperial Yeomanry. It was to-day decided that first detachment of 1,500 should embark on the 27th inst. and another 1,500 on Feb. 1.

Wednesday, Jan. 17.

Apparently a quiet day with all three forces in Cape Colony.

The Times contained a long description of the battle of Colenso, extending over three columns, from its special correspondent at Chieveley Camp. The correspondent, describing the terrific fire of the Boers, says:—

"The Dublins and Connaughts advanced magnificently against the almost overwhelming fire, men falling at every step. As they approached the river the enemy's fire seemed to redouble. Every time a company rose to its feet to advance there was a perfect crash of musketry, and the plain all round them became a cloud of dust spurts. It seemed wonderful that any man could survive it; and yet there was nothing to tell where the enemy lay concealed. Not a single head even was visible; nothing but a long line of smoke, scarcely visible, and the incessant crackling roar. The batteries sent shell after shell wherever they could distinguish the line of the trenches, but they failed to silence the terrible fire."

With reference to the attempts to recover the lost guns, the correspondent writes:—

"At 9.30 Gen. Buller and Gen. Clery rode down to the guns and remained there some time under a heavy fire. It was here that both the generals were wounded. Gen. Buller was hit in the ribs by a fragment of shell, which fortunately did not penetrate his coat, but gave him a severe bruise, and Gen. Clery was grazed right across the chest by a Mauser bullet. It was here also that Capt. Hughes, R.A.M.C., staff-surgeon to Gen. Buller, was killed, being hit in the chest by a rifle bullet. Gen. Buller then ordered the naval 12pr. battery, which had remained in action all the time, to retire. They had lost 32 oxen, and their Kaffir drivers had long since run away. With infinite difficulty it was done, but the spare ammunition waggon was left behind. A Natal farmer and transport rider, named Pringle, the owner of the waggon and span of oxen, then went out quite alone, his Kaffirs having deserted him, and under heavy shell fire at last inspanned the oxen and brought back the ammunition. A little later two exceedingly brave attempts were made to recover the lost guns. Capt. Schofield, A.D.C. to Gen. Buller, Capt. Congreve, temporarily acting as press censor, and Lieut. Roberts, A.D.C. to Gen. Clery, with about six men, harnessed two teams of horses to limbers and galloped out to the guns with them. On the way out Lieut. Roberts was wounded in three places, and Capt. Congreve was hit in the leg as he dismounted. The rest were not touched, although they were under a terrific fire, and succeeded in bringing back two guns, the only two saved from the 14th and 66th Batteries."

Statement published by Lord Mayor as to the Mansion House War Fund, which had up to date amounted to £595,000. Total amount realised from collections in churches on 7th inst. in response to Queen's appeal, £46,000. Grants already made are—to the Patriotic Fund for the widows and orphans of the officers and men killed, £250,000; the National Society for Aid to the Sick and Wounded, £35,000; Lloyd's Patriotic Fund for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors, £45,000; the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association, £90,000; to the Princess of Wales for distribution at Her Royal Highness's discretion among beneficent purposes connected with the war, £5,000; Princess Christian's Convalescent Homes at Bisley, £3,000; the Portland Field Hospital, £1,000; the Imperial War Fund, £2,100; the Imperial Yeomanry Hospital, £1,000; Lloyd's Patriotic Fund for paying for treatment of the temporarily disabled in convalescent homes, £1,000; and the Central British Red Cross Committee, £5,000. From the balance of the fund placed at the Lord Mayor's discretion it is hoped that substantial aid may be given to officers' widows and orphans.

The ceremony of conferring the freedom of the City on the City Imperial Volunteers resumed in Council Chamber of the Guildhall. About 750 members of the corps attended for the purpose of enrolment.

The Pavonia arrived at Southampton with the sick and wounded officers and 73 men from the front. The officers on board included Lieut.-Col. Verner, staff; Major Dashwood, Northumberland Fusiliers; Major Earle, King's Own Light Infantry; Capt. Earle, Grenadier Guards; Lieut. Dobie, R.G.A.; Lieut. Cornwallis West, Scots Guards; Lieut. Fernyhaugh, King's Own Light Infantry; and 2nd Lieut. Hill, Scots Guards.

Thursday, Jan. 18.

First news arrived as to movements of Sir Redvers Buller on Tugela. Lord Roberts telegraphed to Secretary of State for War:—

"Cape Town, Jan. 18.

"I have received a telegram from Buller stating that one brigade and howitzer battery has crossed the Tugela River at Potgieter's Drift. Five miles further west, at Trichardt's Drift, Warren has thrown a pontoon bridge over the river. By this a part of his force crossed yesterday, and the remainder is expected by this morning to be on the north bank. Warren hopes that he will be able to turn the enemy's position, which five miles off to his right front is being strongly entrenched."

The advance commenced on 10th inst., when Lord Dundonald's cavalry brigade left Frere camp, and after a march of 24 miles effected without mishap occupied a position dominating Potgieter's Drift, Upper Tugela. A column of infantry followed on the same line of march, and took up another strong position. Scouts were thrown across the river, and Gen. Lyttelton's brigade, with howitzers and naval guns, crossed at Potgieter's Drift. The artillery were quickly brought into position upon a kopje known as Mount Alice, and the Boer position, five miles to the northward, was briskly shelled, but without reply. Simultaneously with this movement Sir C. Warren with his division successfully crossed the river by another drift, some miles higher up, and took up a strong position. The combined movement was developed yesterday, 17th inst.

Message issued from the War Office from Gen. Buller to Secretary of State for War:—

"Spearman's Camp, Jan. 18, 7.15 p.m.—Following message received from Gen. Warren (?) dated last night: Col. Lord Dundonald, with mounted troops, came into action this afternoon with a force of Boers to the west of Acton Homes. At seven p.m. I reinforced him with detachment of 1st Dragoons. He has occupied the kopje after a fight, and is now holding the position. Field-cornet Heilbron and 20 Boers killed and wounded, and 15 prisoners. Lieut. Shaw, Imperial Light Horse, severely wounded. Two privates, King's Rifle Corps, killed, and one private, Imperial Light Horse, wounded."

Full details published of the successful crossing of the Tugela River by Gen. Buller's force. The advance began on the 10th inst. with a splendid march by Lord Dundonald's cavalry brigade towards Swartz Kop, dominating Potgieter's Drift, a distance of 24 miles. This force was thus able to cover with artillery fire the advance of Gen. Lyttelton's brigade, which took up a strong position on Wednesday a mile to the north of the river opposite the enemy four miles further north. Another movement was carried out almost simultaneously by an apparently larger force under Sir Charles Warren, which effected a crossing five miles higher up the stream. The enemy were about a mile on the north side of the river, but fled to the further hills on the approach of the British force, and only a few volleys were exchanged. Gen. Buller is superintending the combined operations, and issued a spirited appeal and instruction to the forces, beginning, "We are going to the relief of our comrades in Ladysmith; there will be no turning back." The order said to have been received with enthusiasm.

A reconnoitring column under Lord Methuen yesterday found that a laager which had been discovered during Tuesday's demonstration had been removed during the night. The enemy in the vicinity were cleared out of the bush by shell and rifle fire, their response being ineffective. The naval guns shelled the enemy's position to-day. No further news from Modder River at the time of going to press.

The 4th (Militia) Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders sailed from Queenstown for the front. Both at Dublin and at the port of embarkation the battalion received a most enthusiastic send-off.

Two units of the Gentlemen's Corps of the Imperial Yeomanry ready for service. At a committee meeting, over which the Duke of Cambridge presided, it was announced that it had been found possible to reduce the cost of the outfit from £170 to £130.

Last portion of 7th Division, 83rd, 84th, and 85th Batteries R.F.A., under Lieut.-Col. Flint, left Tilbury Docks in Manchester Port en route to front.

Friday Jan. 19.

Gen. Buller telegraphed to War Office from Spearman's Camp, Jan. 18, 7.15 p.m. :—

"Following message received from Gen. Warren (query dated) last night :—Col. Lord Dundonald, with mounted troops, came into action this afternoon with a force of Boers to the west of Acton Homes. At 7 p.m. I reinforced him with detachment of 1st Dragoons. He has occupied the kopjes after a fight, and is now holding the position. Field Cornet (of) Heilbron and 20 Boers killed and wounded, and 15 prisoners. Lieut. Shaw, Imperial Light Horse, severely wounded. Two privates King's Royal Rifle Corps killed, and one private Imperial Light Horse wounded."

No further news had been issued from the War Office when we went to press.

The correspondent of the Central News telegraphed from Spearman's Camp, Jan. 18, 7.25 p.m. :—

"All is going well. Boers continue to maintain an absolute silence in face of our artillery. Naval brigade has kept up a continuous bombardment from Mount Alice throughout the entire day. Our balloon was sent up twice to-day and signalled to the gunners the position of the enemy's lines. At the second ascent it rose to a very high altitude, and the occupants of the car were able to obtain a splendid view of the enemy's entrenchments. Part of Lytton's Brigade has passed over flat ground to-day towards the Boer position. We are now almost in touch with them, but no rifle fire worth mentioning has been exchanged. To-day Boers are plainly visible galloping up from the direction of Colenso and taking position behind kopjes where their laagers are situated. The men are in excellent spirits and good health."

Gen. Gatacre reported sundry minor movements of portions of his force, and reports that otherwise the situation is unchanged.

News from Bloemfontein shows that the Boers admit 470 killed and 800 wounded at Magersfontein, where President Steyn lost three relatives. He is stated to be greatly depressed.

Col. Brabant promoted to the rank of brigadier-general with Gen. Gatacre's force, to command brigade consisting of Brabant's Horse, Cape Rifles, and Cape Police.

Tpr. Farmer, Natal Carabiniers, stated to have been recommended for the Victoria Cross for bravery under fire at the battle of Colenso for saving the life of his officer, Lieut. Mackay, when in great danger.

Major-Gen. Sir Henry Rundle, officiating D.A.G., headquarters, named for the command of the 8th Division.

Commander G. O'B. Carew.—Commander George O'Brien Carew, C.I.E., late Indian Navy and Royal Indian Marine, died at Eastbourne on the 6th inst. at the age of 70. He entered the late Indian Navy in 1846 and became a Lieutenant in 1855. While attached to the Honourable Company's frigate Semiramis he saw considerable service in connection with the suppression of piracy on the coasts of China and Borneo. During the Indian Mutiny he commanded a detachment of the Indian Naval Brigade employed in Bengal, and received the thanks of Government for his services while so employed. On the abolition of the Indian Navy he served in various posts connected with the local sea service maintained by the Government of Bombay until the formation of the Royal Indian Marine, when he was given the rank of Commander in that Service and appointed Deputy Director with charge of the Indian Marine Dockyard at Calcutta, a post he held until retired on Nov. 30, 1887. He was made a Companion of the Indian Empire Order on May 24, 1884.

Inspr.-Gen. E. T. Mortimer.—Inspr.-Gen. of Hospitals Edward Townsend Mortimer, retired, died at Southsea on the 2nd inst., aged 66. He became Surgeon 1856; Staff-Surgeon 1862; Fleet-Surgeon 1876; Deputy Inspector-General 1884; Inspector-General 1889; and retired 1894. He served in the China War from 1857, was present at the capture of Canton, and afterwards that of the Peiho forts, was specially promoted in 1862, and received medal with two clasps. Afterwards served during the Abyssinian War (medal), and took part in suppression of the East Coast slave trade. In the flagship Euryalus accompanied the Commander-in-Chief on a mission to the Queen of Madagascar. Was Deputy Inspector-General at Hong Kong Hospital, and distinguished himself on the occasion of an epidemic of cholera. As Inspector-General he served at the Royal Naval Hospitals at Plymouth and Haslar from 1890-94, and retired in the latter year.

ARMY.

Gen. J. E. Thackwell, C.B.—Gen. Joseph Edwin Thackwell, C.B., Colonel of the Connaught Rangers, died at Cheltenham on the 13th inst., aged 83. He was son of the late Mr. John Thackwell, of Wilton Place, Dymock, and a nephew of the late Gen. Sir J. Thackwell. He joined the Army as Ensign in the 90th Regiment June 8, 1834; was promoted to a Lieutenantancy in the 94th Regiment Oct. 22, 1839; exchanged to the 22nd Regiment Aug. 4, 1841; became Captain May 26, 1848, and wore the uniform of the regiment until promoted to a half-pay Majority, Dec. 12, 1854. He became Lieutenant-Colonel Nov. 2, 1855; Colonel June 25, 1861; Major-General March 6, 1868; Lieutenant-General Dec. 22, 1878; General July 1, 1881; and Colonel Connaught Rangers Dec. 23, 1889. He served with the 22nd Regiment in the campaign in Sind and was present at the battle of Hyderabad (medal); also in the campaign of 1844-45 in the Southern Mahratta country, including the investment and capture of Forts Panulla and Pownghur; served in the Eastern campaign of 1854-55 as Brigade-Major to the 1st Brigade 2nd Division, including the battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman (horse shot), siege of Sebastopol, repulse of the sortie on Oct. 26. On Aug. 4, 1855, he was appointed Assistant-Adjutant-General to the 3rd Division, and served with it until it was broken up in April, 1856 (medal with three clasps, brevets of Major and Lieutenant-Colonel, Knight of the Legion of Honour, Sardinian and Turkish medal, and 5th Class of the Medjidie).

Col. the Marquis of Lothian, K.T.—Schomberg Henry Kerr, ninth Marquis of Lothian, K.T., Honorary Colonel 3rd Batn. Royal Scots, died at 92, Grosvenor-square on Wednesday. He was second son of the seventh Marquis, and was born in 1833. He commanded the 3rd Royal Scots from 1878 to 1889, when he was appointed to the Honorary Colonelcy.

Col. Sir Trevor Wheler, Bart.—Col. Sir Trevor Wheler, Bart., retired list, I.S.C., of Leamington, Hastings, Warwickshire, died at Charlcoote, Lansdowne, Bath, on the 10th inst., aged 71. Sir Trevor, who was the 11th Baronet, joined the Army Dec. 10, 1844; became Captain March 5, 1856; Major April 26, 1859; Lieutenant-Colonel Aug. 16, 1868; and Colonel Jan. 15, 1873. He served in the Sutlej campaign, 1846 (medal with clasp); in the Burmese War, 1852-53 (medal with clasp); in the Indian Mutiny, 1858-59, campaign in Oude, commanded the forces at the action of Sabadutgang, and was in command of a field force in Central India in pursuit of Ferozeshah (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, brevet of Major); in the North-West Frontier campaign, 1863, including the Umbeyla expedition (severely wounded—medal with clasp); and in the Bhootan expedition, 1855-66 (clasp).

Col. T. T. Carter-Campbell.—Col. Thomas Tupper Carter-Campbell, J.P., Lieutenant-Colonel, retired list, Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, died at Farnside, Ardishaig, Argyllshire, on the 14th inst., aged 61. He was third son of the late Admiral John Carter, and joined the Bengal Engineers Dec. 11, 1857, becoming Captain Dec. 14, 1870; Major Oct. 1, 1877; Lieutenant-Colonel Aug. 12, 1886; and retired with the honorary rank of Colonel Jan. 9, 1887. He served in the Sikkim expedition, 1861, under Col. Gaylor (mentioned in despatches and thanked by Government of India), was employed in the campaign against the Boneyrs and other frontier tribes in 1863, including the storm and recapture of the Craig Picquet and Umbeyla, and destruction of Mulkaio (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp), served in the Abyssinian expedition as Director of the Trigonometrical Survey (mentioned in despatches, medal).

Col. M. F. Stokes.—Col. Maurice Fitzmaurice Stokes, retired list, late Royal Munster Fusiliers, died at 12b, Waterloo-place, S.W., on the 13th inst., aged 56. He joined the Army June 8, 1861; became Captain Sept. 3, 1870; Major Dec. 22, 1880; Lieutenant-Colonel Sept. 26, 1883; and Colonel July 1, 1881. He served in the Burmese expedition, 1886-88, in command of the 2nd Bata. Royal Munster Fusiliers (mentioned in despatches, brevet of Colonel, medal and clasp) and again in 1887-89 (clasp).

Lord Ava.—Archibald James Leofric Temple, Earl of Ava, eldest son of the Marquis of Dufferin, died of wounds received in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., never having regained consciousness. Born July 28, 1863, he was educated at Eton, and joined the 17th Lancers as Lieutenant Jan. 27, 1886, remaining with the regiment until 1893, when he retired. He served in the Bechuanaland expedition under Sir Charles Warren in 1884-85 with the Mounted Rifles, and in the Burmese expedition, 1886, as A.D.C. to his father, the Viceroy of India (medal with clasp). When the war broke out in South Africa he was very anxious to get to the front and went out as a newspaper correspondent. Ultimately a place was found for him on Brig.-Gen. Hamilton's staff, and at the battle of Elands Laagte he greatly distinguished himself by his fearless conduct under fire. He was unmarried, and Lord Terence Blackwood, a clerk in the Foreign Office, who was born in 1866 and married Flora, daughter of Mr. J. H. Davis, of New York, now becomes Lord Dufferin's heir.

Lieut.-Col. W. H. Dick-Cunyngham, V.C.—Lieut.-Col. William Henry Dick-Cunyngham, V.C., 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born in 1851 and joined the Gordon Highlanders as Lieutenant Sept. 17, 1873. He first saw service in the Afghan War of 1878-80. He was present on transport duty in the advance to Kandahar and Khelat Ghilzai under Sir Donald Stewart; with the Thull Chotali Force under Major-Gen. Biddulph; under Sir Frederick Roberts in the Kurram Valley Field Force in the 92nd Highlanders, including the engagement at Ali Kheyl; and he took part in the operations round Kabul in December, 1879, including the attack on the Sherpur Pass. He was with the Maidan expedition in 1880 as Acting-Adjutant of a wing of the 92nd Gordon Highlanders, including the engagement at Charasiah on April 25; accompanied Sir Frederick Roberts in the march to Kandahar, and was present at the reconnaissance of Aug. 31 and at the battle of Kandahar. He was awarded the V.C. "for the conspicuous gallantry and coolness displayed by him on Dec. 13, 1879, at the attack on the Sherpur Pass, in having exposed himself to the full fire of the enemy, and by his example and encouragement rallied the men, who, having been beaten back, were at the moment wavering at the top of the hill." He served in the Boer War of 1881 as Adjutant of the 92nd Highlanders, and was subsequently D.A.A.G. at Bengal. He went to Natal last year in command of the 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, and led them into action at the battle of Elands Laagte. He fell early in the charge, wounded by a bullet in the leg. While lying on the ground he called to his men to go on and leave him, and then calmly took out and lit his pipe, waiting for hours before being removed by the ambulance party. About a fortnight ago Sir George White reported that Col. Dick-Cunyngham had completely recovered. He returned to active duty only to be again wounded, this time mortally. Col. Dick-Cunyngham became Captain Oct. 10, 1881; Major March 11, 1891; and obtained his command Feb. 12, 1897. He was uncle to Sir William Dick-Cunyngham, the present Baronet, and fifth son of the eighth Baronet. He married in 1883 Helen, daughter of Mr. Samuel Wauchope, C.B.

Major R. S. Bowen.—Major Robert Scarlett Bowen, 2nd Batn. King's Royal Rifles, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born March 8, 1862, and joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant 28th Regiment on Aug. 11, 1880, being transferred immediately afterwards to the 60th Rifles. He became Lieutenant July 1, 1881; Captain Jan. 17, 1890; and Major on April 16 last.

Major F. F. Crawford.—Major Frederick Fairbairn Crawford, Army Veterinary Department, died in the base hospital, Pietermaritzburg on the 16th inst. of dysentery. He joined the Army June 14, 1873, and became Major June 14, 1893. He served with the Bechuanaland expedition under Sir Charles Warren in 1884-85 and in the operations in Zululand in 1888.

Major C. C. Miller-Wallnutt, D.S.O.—Major Claude Charles Miller-Wallnutt, D.S.O., 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born on March 30, 1861. He was only son of the late Major Wallnutt, 74th Highlanders, and joined the Gordon Highlanders from the Argyll and Bute Artillery Militia as 2nd Lieutenant April 23, 1881, and received his Lieutenancy in the July following. He took part in the Egyptian expedition of 1882 and was present at the battle at Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and bronze star); took part in the Soudan expedition, 1884, under Sir Gerald Graham, including the battles of Teb and Temai (two clasps); in the Soudan expedition to the Nile in 1885, under Major-Gen. Earle, he received another clasp. He took part in the operations in Chitral in 1895, when he accompanied the relief force under Sir Robert Low, and was engaged in the storming of the Malakand Pass (medal with clasp); in the operations on the north-west frontier of India in 1897-98 he was engaged with the Tirah Expeditionary Force, and took part in the action of Dargai (mentioned in despatches and two clasps). He was given the D.S.O. not for the storming of Dargai, but in recognition of his gallantry when doing duty with the rear guard in the retreat from that place two days earlier. He became Captain Jan. 14, 1888, and Major May 18, 1898. Devoted to field sports of all kinds, he was much loved by the men, into whose games he always entered with spirit and enthusiasm.

Surg. R. Collum.—Surg. R. Collum, retired list, I.M.S., died at Surbiton on the 13th inst., aged 84 years. A distinguished Army surgeon, he was the only doctor who accompanied Sir Charles Napier upon his setting out for the conquest of the Sind in the cholera-stricken steamship Zenobia from Bombay in 1842. In eight days the bodies of 64 soldiers were thrown overboard. In addition to his medical duties Dr. Collum acted as pilot of the ship. After performing valuable services for many years in India he retired from the Service, and upon his return to England was elected President of the Royal College of Surgeons, which position he held for seven years.

Brevet-Major D. Mackworth.—Brevet-Major Digby Mackworth, Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was the eldest son of Col. Sir Arthur William Mackworth, C.B., sixth Baronet, and was born on May 20, 1868. He joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant in the Queen's Sept. 14, 1887; became Lieutenant June 1, 1890; Captain Nov. 11, 1896; and Brevet-Major July 3, 1899. He served in the Burmese expedition of 1887-88 (medal with clasp) and in the West African expedition of 1897-98 in the Northern Territories of the Gold Coast, taking part in the operations against the Binduris (mentioned in despatches, brevet of Major). He went out to South Africa in October last on special service.

Capt. W. B. Lafone.—Capt. William Boutchen Lafone, 1st Batn. Devonshire Regiment, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born Dec. 15, 1860. He joined the Devonshire Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant Aug. 11, 1880, and became Lieutenant July 1, 1881, and Captain Jan. 18, 1888. He served in the operations on the north-west frontier of India in 1897-98 with the Tirah Expeditionary Force, for which he had the medal with two clasps.

Capt. A. W. Brown.—Capt. Arthur Wale Brown, 1st Batn. Suffolk Regiment, who was taken prisoner near Colesberg on the 6th inst., has since died of his wounds at Pretoria. Born Oct. 4, 1867, he obtained his commission as 2nd Lieutenant Nov. 4, 1889; became Lieutenant April 26, 1893; and Captain June 23, 1898.

Capt. H. W. Raymond.—Capt. Henry Warner Raymond, late 9th Royal Irish Rifles, died at Villa Laura, San Remo, on the 17th inst. aged 38.

Lieut. C. W. O. Unthank.—Lieut. Clement William Onley Unthank, 3rd Hussars, was thrown from his horse at Lucknow on Tuesday whilst playing polo, and died from the effects, aged 25. He was eldest son of Mr. C. W. J. Unthank, of Intwood Hall, Norfolk, and joined the Army Dec. 12, 1894, becoming Lieutenant May 22, 1895.

Lieut. R. J. T. D. Jones.—Lieut. Robert James T. Digby Jones, R.E., was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst. Born Sept. 27, 1876, he joined the Royal Engineers as 2nd Lieutenant Aug. 5, 1896, and became Lieutenant in August last. Lieut. Jones was the young officer who came so prominently under notice on the occasion of the recent sortie from Ladysmith, when to him was entrusted the duty of destroying one of the enemy's guns.

Lieut. C. E. M. Walker.—Lieut. Claude Ernest Myln Walker, 1st Somerset Light Infantry, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born in 1875 and joined the Army as a 2nd Lieutenant in the Somerset Light Infantry from the Militia in 1897, receiving his Lieutenant's commission on July 12, 1899. He also was engaged in the operations on the north-west frontier of India in 1897-98 with the Tirah Expeditionary Force (medal with clasp).

Lieut. N. M. Tod.—Lieut. Noel Moir Tod, 1st Bata. Scottish Rifles, attached to the King's Royal Rifles, was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst. Born Dec. 21, 1875, he joined the Scottish Rifles as 2nd Lieutenant Feb. 26, 1896, and became Lieutenant March 23, 1898.

Lieut. L. D. Hall.—Lieut. Lewis Duval Hall, 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born on March 18, 1876. He received his commission as a 2nd Lieutenant in the Rifle Brigade in 1897 from the Militia, obtaining his Lieutenant's commission on Oct. 22. He took part in Lord Kitchener's expedition to Omdurman in 1898, and was at the battle of Khartoum, receiving the Egyptian medal with clasp and Khedive's medal with clasp.

2nd Lieut. M. E. Aspinall.—2nd Lieut. Miles Edward Aspinall, 3rd Batn. Scots Guards, died in Dover-street, W., on the 16th inst., aged 20. He was son of Mr. R. J. Aspinall, of Standen, and joined the Scots Guards on Aug. 12, 1899.

2nd Lieut. G. B. B. Denniss.—2nd Lieut. George Barlow Bartley Denniss, R.E., was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst. Born Nov. 30, 1878, he was educated at Harrow, where he took the first mathematical scholarship. He was the eldest son of Mr. E. B. Denniss, barrister, of the Middle Temple, and joined the Royal Engineers in March, 1898.

2nd Lieut. W. H. T. Hill.—2nd Lieut. William Henry Tucker Hill, 5th Lancers, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born on May 2, 1873, and entered the Army from the Militia in 1895. He was the senior sub-lieutenant of his regiment.

2nd Lieut. F. H. Raikes.—2nd Lieut. Francis Howard Raikes, 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade, who was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was born July 4, 1879, and entered the Army July 13, 1898.

THE ARTILLERY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—We constantly hear of heavy Boer losses caused by our shell fire. These losses, however, are usually "estimated" or said to be reported by natives. What means natives have of knowing is a curious question. But we have some wounded Boer prisoners, and it would be well worth inquiry as to the proportion wounded by rifle and by shell fire. The inquiry might also with advantage be extended to our own wounded. The facts could easily be ascertained, as a weekly return is sent to the War Office by the P.M.O. at the base hospital, which gives the necessary information. I believe it would be found that the percentage wounded by shells is very small as compared with the percentage wounded by rifles. It may be urged, but this does not apply to our own men, that the enemy have time to carry off those wounded by artillery fire, but this applies equally to those wounded by long-range rifle fire. It will probably be found that the results of artillery fire hardly compensate for the enormous transport required, which might be far more profitably employed. As for the moral effect on the Boers it merely seems that they withdraw guns and make the men take shelter till the moment for action arrives.

Another point worthy of attention is the loss which long-range artillery fire inflicts on its own side during the attack. I have read a letter from an officer who was present at Talana Hill describing how the attack of the Royal Irish Fusiliers had to be suspended owing to the leaders being struck down by our own shrapnel. This is also said to have been the case in regard to the Rifles, as stated in an officer's letter published in the Contemporary Review for January. Yet in the Artillery Drill Book it was laid down that as attacking infantry approach the enemy's position, the guns should move closer to avoid firing on their friends, a most demoralising proceeding.

On the one occasion on which the artillery, two batteries and three machine guns, had an opportunity of causing really heavy loss to the Boers, they were prevented from firing, if we may believe the letter in the Daily Telegraph of Dec. 25, by the direct order of the general commanding, who is said to have allowed the enemy to retreat across the front at short range quite unmolested because they hoisted a white flag. But it seems hardly credible that any officer of experience would treat a retreating enemy on service as if at an Aldershot field day.

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Capt. Ricardo and the four troopers captured near Colesberg were sent to Bloemfontein, where they are said to have been treated with all respect.

3rd Dragoon Guards.—Headquarters and three squadrons are to be moved to the Curragh from Dundalk. Capt. Robertson, D.S.O., has vacated his appointment as D.A.A.G. Military Intelligence at headquarters, having been appointed a D.A.A.G. in South Africa.

4th Dragoon Guards.—Lieut.-Col. Sullivan has been granted an extension of command for 12 months from March 11.

5th Lancers.—Major Bailey has received leave from his staff appointment in India, and has left for South Africa to join headquarters at the front.

10th Hussars.—The latest accounts of Lieut. the Hon. G. Portman, who has been lying seriously ill at Cape Town, are, we are glad to say, somewhat more favourable.

15th Hussars.—The first regiment of the Imperial Yeomanry completed for service in South Africa by linking together the Shropshire, Worcestershire, and two Northumberland companies, in all about 520 officers and men, is to be commanded by Major F. C. Meyrick, recently retired from the regiment.

17th Lancers.—The Duke of Cambridge, Colonel-in-Chief, inspected the regiment on parade at Aldershot on Monday in a downpour of rain. The men were dismounted in review order. The proceedings, owing to the state of the weather, were very brief. The reservists paraded separately and were complimented by the Duke on their smart appearance and on the promptitude with which they had responded to the call to arms, only one man having failed to report himself. His Royal Highness said he was sure that the regiment would well maintain its high character on service. The reserve squadron remains at Ballincollig.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

In all 12 batteries R.F.A. and 72 guns will leave England within the next few days for South Africa, some 3,420 of all ranks, and 2,210 horses. The St. Andrew, leaving the Royal Albert Docks tomorrow, will convey Nos. 2 and 44 Batteries and an ammunition column, whilst the American at Southampton will embark tomorrow and at Queenstown on Tuesday the 8th and 68th Batteries. The Ulstermore will leave Liverpool on Monday with the 39th and 88th Batteries and an ammunition column. The Manhattan will embark on Thursday at the Royal Albert Dock the 5th, 9th, and 17th Batteries and an ammunition column. The Canning and Englishman will sail from the Royal Albert Dock on the 27th inst., with the 43rd, 86th, and 87th Batteries, an ammunition column, and the staff of the 12th Brigade Division.

The 10th and 26th Batteries R.F.A. from Shorncliffe and 92nd Battery from Colchester will be moved to Aldershot on Monday and Tuesday next.

The 83rd, 84th, and 85th Batteries R.F.A. embarked at Tilbury Dock on Thursday in the Manchester Port for South Africa.

The new 99th Battery R.F.A. is being formed at Longford as from Wednesday last, on which date it was taken on to the establishment.

The new 100th, 101st, 102nd, and 103rd Batteries R.F.A. are to be raised at once.

No. 32 Company, Southern Division, R.G.A. sailed from Queenstown on Thursday in the City of Rome for Gibraltar, where it relieves No. 2 Company, Southern Division, which proceeds in the same transport to South Africa.

Capt. St. J. L. H. du Plat Taylor joins M Battery R.H.A. in South Africa.

Capt. W. T. Furse, R.F.A., has been selected for special service in South Africa.

Lieut. W. G. Thompson and one man of O Battery R.H.A. are stated to have been slightly wounded and taken prisoners near Colesberg on the 15th inst.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The 47th Company sailed from Southampton on Monday in the Aurania for South Africa.

Lieut. E. J. Durnford, doing duty at Malta, is appointed Assistant-Instructor in submarine mining at Chatham.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—There is no truth in the report which has been published to the effect that Lord Salisbury has received messages from Mafeking regarding his son, Brevet-Major Lord Edward Cecil.

The family have received no news since the investment of the town. We regret to learn that Capt. Heneage, 3rd Batn., is down with enteric fever in South Africa. Amongst the many individual acts of bravery displayed by the troops in South Africa that of Pte. Fitzmaurice, 3rd Batn., stands out prominently. During the thick of the fight at Belmont Lieut.-Col. Crabbe became detached from his men, and was immediately surrounded by Boers. Seeing his colonel's danger, Fitzmaurice rushed to his assistance. He shot two Boers, bayoneted a third, and under a heavy fire carried Col. Crabbe to the ambulance waggon. The colonel was shot in the wrist and injured in the thigh; these were the wounds he described as scratches when wiring the result. He was soon about again, and his first act was to recommend Fitzmaurice for the Victoria Cross. Fitzmaurice was one of the first to volunteer from the 1st Batn. to join the 3rd Batn.

Coldstream Guards.—The body of the Marquis of Winchester is expected to reach England on Tuesday next.

Scots Guards.—Permission has been given for the band to be increased by one sergeant, one corporal and 20 privates on the augmentation of the strength of the regiment by the addition of a 3rd Batn. Mr. Dunkerton, bandmaster, has retired from the Army after upwards of 42 years' service. During that period he acted as bandmaster for a quarter of a century. Born in the Army, the son of a colour-sergeant in the old 56th, he enlisted in 1857 at the age of 14, joining the band of his father's corps. He has had a fair share of foreign service, India (twice), all the Mediterranean stations, and Nova Scotia. After 19 years as bandmaster of the Royal Munster Fusiliers he was transferred in 1893 to the Scots Guards, and ranked as the senior regimental warrant officer bandmaster in the Service. Mr. Dunkerton is 56 years of age, and was therefore within four years of his compulsory retirement. He claimed his discharge at three months' notice. Under his care and direction the band of the Scots Guards has attained a state of efficiency.

Bufs (3rd).—The 2nd Batn. arrived at Cape Town on Sunday last in the Gaika from England. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Canterbury yesterday for Cork to take over quarters on embodiment.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—Major London, 1st Batn., has been ordered to South Africa.

King's Regiment (8th).—The 2nd Batn. at Enniskillen has been placed under orders to proceed at once to Gibraltar.

Norfolk Regiment (9th).—The details of the 2nd Batn. left behind at Aldershot are to be moved to Fermoy.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—The Times correspondent gives particulars of an act of heroism on the part of an officer of the 1st Batn. on the occasion of the fighting round Ladysmith. Lieut. Masterson was sent back across the fire-swept zone with a message. It was of the utmost importance. He was hit by three bullets, but struggled on and delivered his message. His wounds are doing well.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—A service in memory of Lieut.-Col. Watson and the officers of the 1st Batn. killed at Rensburg was held at St. Mary's Parish Church, Dover, on Saturday last. Among those present were Major-Gen. Hallam Parr, C.B., and the principal officers of the district. A heavy reinforcing draft of the 1st Batn. is being prepared by the 3rd Batn. at Dover for South Africa to replace the losses sustained at Rensburg. The whole Militia battalion would go out if it could, so excellent is the spirit of officers and men. Major Mackenzie, 2nd Batn., is about to be promoted to the command of the 1st Batn., vice Lieut.-Col. Watson, killed in action, and is en route from India to take up his duties. Capt. Brown, 1st Batn., who died of his wounds received at the fight on the 7th inst., received a most impressive funeral, which was attended by many burghers and local residents at Bloemfontein. There was every feeling of sympathy shown.

East Yorkshire Regiment (15th).—The 2nd Batn. will leave Tipperary on Monday for Aldershot, where it will arrive on Tuesday.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. arrived in Dublin on Wednesday from Hertford and took over quarters on embodiment.

Leicestershire Regiment (17th).—The 2nd Batn. at the Curragh has been placed under orders for immediate embarkation for Gibraltar.

Yorkshire Regiment (19th).—Capt. Orr, 1st Batn., was dangerously wounded, we regret to learn, in action near Rensburg on Jan. 16.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—The 6th (Militia) Batn. which recently volunteered for foreign service has been placed in readiness to embark for Halifax, N.S.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—The colours of the 2nd Batn. were on Thursday handed over by Col. Sheringham, commanding the regimental district, to the Mayor of Chester to be deposited in the city council chamber while the regiment is on active service. The ceremony took place in front of the town hall.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—The 2nd Batn. sailed from Southampton on Saturday last for South Africa in the Bavarian. The details left behind at Aldershot are to be moved to Dublin. Major Palmes, 1st Batn., has been appointed second in command of the 2nd Batn.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th) sailed from Southampton on Saturday last for South Africa in the Bavarian. The details left behind at Aldershot are to be moved to the Curragh.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (33rd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived at Cork on Thursday from Halifax and took over quarters on embodiment.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th) has been placed under orders to return home immediately from Gibraltar.

South Lancashire Regiment (40th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. sailed from Liverpool on Tuesday in the City of Rome for South Africa.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (43rd) arrived at Cape Town on Sunday last in the Gaika from England. The destination of the 3rd (Militia) Batn. was changed at the last moment from Limerick to Buttevant greatly to the disappointment of the officers, who had made special arrangements for the comfort of their men on arrival.

Royal Berkshire Regiment (49th).—Capt. Wigan has been appointed acting D.A.A.G., Southern District. Capt. Arbuthnot and Lieut. Maurice, doing duty with the Queen's Guard at East Cowes, dined at Osborne on Tuesday and had the honour of being presented to Her Majesty in the drawing-room afterwards.

Royal West Kent Regiment (50th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived at Malta on the 12th inst. in the Golconda from England and took over quarters. It was most enthusiastically received.

King's Own Light Infantry (51st) is under orders to move on Thursday next from Buttevant to Limerick.

Dorsetshire Regiment (54th).—2nd Lieut. Gore-Booth, we are sorry to say, is down with enteric fever in South Africa.

Middlesex Regiment (57th).—Major Branchley, 4th (Militia) Batn., is acting as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Maurice, C.B., commanding the Woolwich District.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—The Queen sent, through Sir Arthur Bigge, a gracious message of sympathy to the Hon. G. R. Vernon and the Hon. Mrs. Vernon on the death of their son, Capt. Ronald Vernon, who was killed in the heroic sortie from Mafeking on Dec. 26 :—

"Her Majesty has heard with high praise of your gallant son, and felt proud of him and all who have so nobly resisted the siege of Mafeking. The Queen desires me to say how sincerely she sympathises with Mrs. Vernon and you in this crushing sorrow. Her Majesty knows that in such moments words can do little to bring real comfort, but Her Majesty feels that in your sadness there will be the lasting bright thought that your son gave his life in devoted and self-sacrificing service to Queen and country. The Queen would much like to have a photograph of him if you will kindly send one."

The 4th Batn. moved on Thursday from Cork to Dublin. The 9th (Militia) Batn. left Queenstown on Saturday last for South Africa in the Nile. Major-Gen. M'Calmont inspected the battalion before its departure, when he addressed the men and said that everyone admired the loyalty which had induced them to come forward. He was sure they would give the Boers a good deal more than they bargained for. He was entrusted by the Duke of Connaught to express His Royal Highness's high appreciation of their loyalty, and to say that though he could not see them embark he hoped to welcome them home on their return.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived at Fermoy on Wednesday from Devizes and took over quarters on embodiment.

Manchester Regiment (63rd).—The commissioned ranks in the 3rd (Militia) Batn. are now full for the first time since 1881, and the commanding officer has instituted a "waiting list," which already contains several names.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—A memorial service for the late Lieut.-Col. Dick-Cunyngham, V.C., killed at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was held at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, yesterday and was largely attended by friends of the lamented officer and of the regiment. Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Macbean is about to be promoted to the command.

Middlesex Regiment (77th).—Lieut.-Col. Jervis-White writes from Heathfield, Wexford:—

"I desire to appeal through your columns for assistance from the county of Middlesex to send out to the battalion, one of the territorial battalions of the county, and now serving under Sir Redvers Buller in Natal, 2,000 pairs of woollen socks. I can procure serviceable ones at 8d. per pair, and shall be happy to receive subscriptions from 1s. and upwards and arrange to despatch them to the regiment."

Cameron Highlanders (79th).—The 2nd Batn. has been placed under orders to return home at once from Gibraltar.

South Staffordshire Regiment (80th).—Capt. Davidson, who was to have been A.D.C. to the late Major-Gen. Prior, will act in that capacity on the staff of Major-Gen. Wavell, Gen. Prior's successor, in command of the 15th Brigade, and left England with his chief on Saturday last for South Africa in the Bristol.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Sir William Gatacre reported officially on the 13th inst.: "Lieut.-Col. Eagar and Major Seton still at Stormberg, the former progressing as favourably as possible, leg amputated, fingers of both hands very seriously injured by bullets; Major Seton progressing favourably." Major Abye, a prisoner of war at Pretoria, who has been seriously ill with enteric fever, was by last accounts convalescent.

Connaught Rangers (88th).—The 5th (Militia) Batn. moved on Wednesday from Woolwich to Shorncliffe and took over quarters. The colonelcy is vacant by the death of Gen. J. E. Thackwell, C.B., on Saturday last. Gen. Thackwell, who served as a subaltern of the 94th, 1839-41, was appointed to be "chief" of the regiment Dec. 23, 1889.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. sailed from Queenstown on Thursday in the City of Rome for South Africa.

Manchester Regiment (96th) left Dublin yesterday for Aldershot, where it will arrive to-day.

Royal West Kent Regiment (97th) has been placed under orders to leave Egypt immediately for South Africa.

North Staffordshire Regiment (98th) left Southampton on Monday in the Aurania for South Africa.

Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians) (100th).—Headquarters and the service companies at Halifax, N.S., have been placed under orders for service in South Africa and will leave in about a fortnight's time. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived at Woolwich on Friday from Birr and took over quarters on embarkment.

Royal Munster Fusiliers (104th).—In ordinary circumstances headquarters and the service companies would now be en route to England, as they were to have sailed from Bombay on the 3rd inst. and would have arrived at Southampton on the 24th, but in consequence of the war in South Africa their departure from India is postponed indefinitely.

Army Service Corps.—Nos. 6 and 10 Companies from Woolwich left Southampton on Monday in the Aurania for South Africa. There are now over 3,000 non-commissioned officers and men of the corps serving in South Africa. The long lines of communication and numerous depôts make the duties most arduous, but unless this important branch is efficient the rest of the Army must suffer. It is proposed to arrange the work of collecting useful articles into districts, and the following ladies will be grateful for any contributions such as caps, socks, pocket-handkerchiefs, pipes, tobacco, cigarettes, &c., or moneys to purchase the same: Mrs. Knecker, Rosecliffe, Saltash, Cornwall (Western District and Scotland); Mrs. Hadfield, Royal Barracks, Dublin (Ireland); Mrs. Clayton, Commanding Officer's Hut, Stanhope Lines, Aldershot (Aldershot and Southern District); Mrs. Parkyn, Montague House, Vanburgh Park, Blackheath, S.E. (Thames District and London); Mrs. Oughterson, A.S.C. Barracks, Woolwich (Woolwich District). Lieut.-Col. Parkyn, Headquarters, Brompton Barracks, Chatham, will be glad to hear from any other ladies in districts who will kindly assist, and also advise as to transmission of parcels, &c., &c.

Chaplains' Department.—The chaplains now serving in South Africa are: 1st Class—Revs. E. H. Goodwin (Principal Chaplain) and R. F. Collins (R.C.); 2nd Class—Revs. E. M. Morgan (R.C.), T. F. Falkner, and W. B. L. Alexander (R.C.); 3rd Class—Revs. E. Ryan (R.C.), F. B. N. Norman-Lee, A. A. L. Gedge, J. Robertson (P.), R. Armitage, W. C. Haines, and L. J. Matthews (R.C.); and 4th Class—Revs. W. F. Sorbie, C. F. Baines, E. W. M. Norris, R. J. D. Oliver, J. Beney, J. T. Bird (P.), T. Murray (P.), A. V. C. Horndean, W. S. Jaffray (P.), J. G. W. Tuckey, W. Keatinge (R.C.), F. A. Hill, S. E. Smith, J. Blackbourne. On way out—Revs. E. R. Day, H. T. Coney, and M. Jones. Under orders—Rev. F. P. Jellicoe.

REGIMENTAL HISTORIES.

The Welch Regiment—the old 41st—has hitherto been without an historical record well deserving of the name, and a manuscript work, entitled the "Digest of Services," has for some years been the only real source of information concerning its achievements. As long ago as October, 1893, we heard that the records of the 41st were in active preparation, and we believe that a new and handsome volume by Capt. and Adj. D. A. N. Lomax is the volume then proposed. It has just been issued under the title of A History of the Services of the 41st, the Welch Regiment (now 1st Batn. the Welch Regiment), from its Formation in 1779 to 1895 (Devonport: Hiorns and Miller). The 41st was originally raised as a regiment of invalids, being embodied from among the out-pensioners of Chelsea Hospital, and it was not added to the line until the end of 1787. The regiment was then employed in reducing the French possessions in the West Indies, and, after having served some 12 years in Canada, was plunged into the heavy fighting with the United States of America from 1812 to 1814. It greatly distinguished itself at Frenchtown, and after a good deal of fighting, met with what its historian describes as its débâcle at Moravianstadt. When the fleet had been lost on Lake Erie, Gen. Procter neglected to make proper arrangements to secure the retreat, which began on Sept. 27, 1813. The movement was very slow, and the 41st, though eager to fight, was given no opportunity, and was ultimately enveloped. The enemy's mounted riflemen broke through its ranks, and the loss was very severe, while the famous Indian chief, Tecumseh, commanding the native allies, was killed, scalped, and partly flayed. The remnant of the 41st Regiment was compelled to surrender, and suffered extreme hardships in long and arduous marches. After forming part of the Army of Occupation in France, the 41st distinguished itself in the Burma War, and was shortly afterwards entitled to assume the Prince of Wales's plume, and the famous motto, "Gwell Angau na Cywilydd," meaning "Better Death than Dishonour." The regiment fought through the war that followed the disastrous retreat from Kabul, when the 44th Regiment was annihilated, and Dr. Brydon alone of the great army carried the news to Jellalabad. Capt. Lomax describes at great length the conspicuous services rendered by the 41st in the Crimea. The regiment was exposed to a heavy fire at the Alma, as it advanced towards the burning village of Bourliouk, but it suffered less heavily than might have been expected. At Inkerman, where its colours were carried in the thick of the fight, it was the first regiment encountered by the Russians on the right flank as it advanced against a column of 4,000. In the tremendous fighting at the Sandbag Battery, which was one of the most sanguinary businesses ever witnessed in war, the 41st fought most valorously, and lost very heavily indeed. Five officers were killed and six wounded out of 21, and 126 of the rank and file were killed and wounded. The regiment was actively engaged in the trenches, and rendered great services up to the end of the war. All those who are associated with the regiment will thank Capt. Lomax for the care he has devoted to bringing together such an excellent record. He seems to have left no source of information untouched, and has been able to include many personal narratives. Mr. Milne, who perhaps knows more than any man about dress, equipment, and colours, has contributed two admirable chapters on the subject. The book is also beautifully illustrated and very well printed.

A record of the 17th Lancers in every respect adequate was written some years ago by the Hon. J. W. Portescue, but there was room for the popular narrative which has just been written by Mr. D. H. Parry under the title of The Death or Glory Boys (Cassell and Co.). The record of such a regiment is, of course, full of very picturesque interest, for its origin may be traced to the dying wish of Wolfe that his old friend, Col. Hale, should carry home the despatches from Quebec, and it was he who then became the father as it were of the 17th Lancers. The regiment served through most of the fighting with the American colonists, at the capture of Montevideo, and in the East, and as all the world knows in the famous charge of the Light Brigade, as well as in the pursuit of Tantia Toppe, and in the Zulu War. It is a very stirring story, well told by Mr. Parry.

SHORT NOTICES.

We had the great pleasure some time ago of drawing attention to several pamphlets written by Lieut.-Col. W. Hill James, late 31st Regiment. The gallant author's purpose was to invest with its full interest the neighbourhood of Biarritz, for it was there that the concluding actions of the Peninsular War were fought. The brochures describe the actions of the Nivelle and the Nive and Sir Roland Hill's great action at St. Pierre under the general title of Battles Round Biarritz. A second edition of the account of the two battles first named has just been published by Messrs. M'Lagan and Cumming of Edinburgh. Nothing could be better than the way in which the author instructs visitors how to see the ground, and his maps and pictures are excellent. When Her Majesty in the winter of 1888-89 visited Arcangues, she expressed regret that there was nothing to commemorate those who fell in the battles round the village at the beginning of the century. Col. Hill James has patriotically made good the omission, as a memorial also of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. It takes the form of the cross of the Distinguished Service Order, and lies, surrounded by a multangular framework of stone in the village churchyard. The same author has also just written an account of Our Fighting King (Army and Navy Co-operating Society). It tells the story of Cœur de Lion in connection with Bayonne, Toulouse, and Gascony, which was his inheritance from his mother, and was designed by Henry II. to be that part of the Imperium over which Richard should preside. The King was an excellent fighting man, with the spirit also of a troubadour, and was a Gascon of the Gascons, inspired with that spirit which has given us the word "Gasconade," though with much real quality to back him. Col. James's little book is very full of interest, and describes Richard's service in the Crusade extremely well. These little books may be heartily recommended to those who spend the winter in the neighbourhood of Biarritz.

The members of the London Stock Exchange are a very sporting body. A few months ago they testified their enthusiasm by producing a book entitled The "House" on Sport, and a second volume has just been issued under the editorship of Mr. W. A. Morgan (Gale and Polden). Space fails us to do any justice to this rather remarkable book, but we may say that it is upon the lines of its predecessor, and that it is full of excellent narratives of big game shooting, big horn hunting in the Rockies, chamois hunting, deer stalking, otter hunting, and other varieties of sport, besides including chapters on cricket, curling, rowing, and yachting. Among the sporting writers are Messrs. Norman B. Smith, H. E. M. Stutfield, F. Ogilvy, A. Young, and M. C. Summers, while those who contribute chapters upon games are Messrs. C. J. Burnup, R. D. Hedderwick, C. W. Kent, and A. G. Wildy. The illustrations are all good, and add a great deal to the attractions of a very interesting book. Not the least satisfactory part of this literary venture is that the profits are devoted to the Referee Children's Dinner Fund. Mr. Morgan tells us in the preface that a sum of £1,400 was raised in this way, and the second volume certainly deserves to be as successful.

Messrs. Vacher and Sons will publish, on the eve of the new session of Parliament, the second issue of The Politician's Handbook, a review and digest of current State papers, by Mr. H. Whates. The diplomatic correspondence relating to South Africa will be comprehensively digested, and the China papers, Peace Conference discussions and conventions, arbitration awards, new diplomatic instruments, and other documents of an historical character will be fully presented.

Fashion is the monthly monitor of men who desire to fail in no sartorial advantage. Hitherto they have lacked the "light and leading" of an organ of the press, but now our bright little contemporary should suffice for their needs.

AUSTRALIAN NAVAL DEFENCE.

IT was hardly to be expected that the general chorus of disapproval which in this country greeted the publication of the proposals on the naval defence of Australia by a conference which assembled at Melbourne would pass without notice in the colonies. Commander Collins, the Secretary for Defence at Melbourne, has written to the Times in answer to the criticisms on the proposals which appeared in our contemporary, and, as he says, in order "to remove what I regard as misconceptions on the part of the writer of the article." The Times article appeared on October 6 last, and Commander Collins writes under date November 29, so that he wisely for the sake of clearness places the Times' remarks and his own in parallel columns, but it must be confessed that the latter are not very convincing. We cannot admit as a good argument in favour of the proposals the fact stated by Commander Collins that they were approved of by the leading press of Australia, since, on the other hand, there was so far as we are aware not a single journal or naval authority on this side that approved them. It is evident, we think, that the reason for this divergence of opinion is that, as Mr. Loring points out in the Times, a different view has been taken of the meaning of the report here and over sea.

It is, however, of the very highest importance that there should be no doubt whatever as to the meaning of the report, and it is very necessary that this should be thrashed out without delay. It certainly seemed to us, as it has to others in this country, that it was proposed by the scheme set forth and recommended by the conference to provide a special colonial squadron manned by amateurs, serving under conditions different from those of the national Navy. Commander Collins in his notes objects to this conclusion and says, "It is not proposed to set up a separate Navy as distinct from the defence of the whole Empire. The proposal was to devise a scheme by which the colonies could assist in manning not only vessels on this station, allotted perhaps to particular and special duties, but also provide a reserve of men available for Her Majesty's naval service generally." And he goes on to say further that "It is when sons of the Empire stand shoulder to shoulder, fight together, endure together, that we have a real and effective force behind the Imperial idea and a tie to truly unite us." Just now when the colonial contingents are so gallantly aiding in the war in South Africa it is not likely that this fact or its significance will be forgotten, but at the same time it should be remembered that, as Mr. Loring aptly points out, there is no part of the working of the Navy which is not at this moment as freely open to the services of an Australian as to those of an inhabitant of the United Kingdom.

The most useful and practical form of colonial contributions towards Imperial defence, so far as the Navy is concerned, would be an annual grant towards its cost, the money to be applied by the Admiralty to the increase of the fleet without conditions or restrictions of any kind. Commander Collins condemns such a form of contribution for three reasons. First, the Australian Governments would in any circumstances make it a condition that the commerce along their coasts should not be denuded entirely of naval protection. Secondly, it would not be politic, he says, to make a money contribution until the self-governing colonies have a voice in the control of the expenditure. Finally, he declares, "a cash nexus will prove a poor means of welding the Empire." But as "Navalis" justly observes in a letter to the Times, the real nexus of the Empire is the Imperial Navy, while so far as the protection of commerce is concerned, if the colonies do not rely upon the services of the Navy they are putting their trust in something that must prove a weak reed. It is all very well for Commander Collins to say that it is not proposed to set up a separate Navy, but it would be difficult for him to show how his proposals could have any other effect. By the calling together of the conference it is practically admitted that the colonies are at least under a moral obligation to contribute, and there has never been in this country any wish to override the sentiments or wishes of the colonists. But as Mr. Loring puts it, "Australia is the property of the Australians, and Australia is a wealthy country to-day because the people of the United Kingdom have, without requiring any contributions from Australians, borne for forty years the entire cost of defending that country from attack. Is it too much to ask the people of Australia now to make a contribution to that defence without requiring for the first few years a representation which, by reason of the smallness of the contribution as compared with the expenditure, it would be impossible to apportion?" It is somewhat ungenerous of the colonists to forget, as they appear to do, that the Admiralty have, in the words of the Duke of Devonshire's memorandum, "accepted the responsibility of protecting all British territory abroad against organised invasion from the sea." The fleets required to fulfil this obligation will also protect seaports and commerce, and although some supplementary defence against raids may be necessary in the case of certain harbours, this cannot be given effectually by means of local squadrons. We do not understand what Commander Collins means when he says that the defence of coasts is not a task for the Navy, for it is quite certain that any other form of defence must be wrong in principle. So far we are not aware that the Admiralty have expressed an opinion upon these proposals, but after the discussion which has taken place an exposition of their views on the subject cannot be long delayed. We make not the slightest doubt that they will express their condemnation of any scheme based on the recommendation of the conference at Melbourne, and allow no considerations, sentimental or otherwise, to bias their judgment in the matter.

Naval Notes.

Examination of the cargo of the Bundesrath has been completed and found to correspond with the bills of lading. It is announced, therefore, that the ship is to be released, and the Government of this country will pay full compensation to her owners. While we may regret such a termination of the incident as likely to make an argument for renewed attacks upon our naval officers in the German press, yet, on the other hand, the fact that we are ready to cheerfully pay for the mistake should set us right with all unbiased observers. It will be particularly interesting to learn on what grounds the officers of the cruisers suspected these German vessels, and this, doubtless, we shall learn in time. The Cologne Gazette jeers at us as having been the victims of "false reports from spies of dubious character and from agents provocateurs." This is quite possible, and Dr. Leyds may have been chuckling to himself at the clever manner in which he has misled us into seizing the wrong vessel while the real shippers of war material were running their cargoes with impunity. It is stated that the Government in announcing to the German officials that the ship will be released have given a guarantee that such incidents shall not occur again. We can hardly believe that this is the case, especially if it be true that the reason for their action is that these vessels were mail steamers, and that they are anxious that we should have similar privileges accorded to our own vessels. It is quite true that it would be more to the benefit of this country than any other to have it recognised that mail steamers are not liable to seizure, but it should not be forgotten that circumstances alter, and that it is not every Power who may be found willing to recognise the existence of such a rule, provided the neutral be unable to enforce it.

In an interesting letter from the Modder River a correspondent writes: "Naval brigades increase and multiply. Events are stronger than principles, the wills of authorities at home or on the spot. This one began in a small way; now it consists of well nigh 500 officers and men with two 4.7in. quick-firing guns with lyddite, and four 12pr. quick-firing guns. Then there is Lambton's small brigade of 230 or so at Ladysmith, and Pitcairn Jones's brigade with Buller's relieving force which seems to grow in strength continually. Such harm as we have inflicted on the enemy up to date on this side has been done by artillery fire and at small cost to the seamen. So far only five men have been hit at the naval guns. Our losses all along the line have been caused by frontal attacks over flat bare fields of fire up to entrenched positions bristling with magazine rifles. At Graspan the naval brigade, about 300 strong, got through, but at a cost of one hundred casualties, and to me the miracle is how a single one of us escaped. Critics all say the artillery has been splendidly managed, and the Commandant Royal Artillery, Colonel Hall, is making a big reputation on this side. The sappers have worked wonders in the making and mending of railways, bridges, and telegraphs. As we go along in the train a broken culvert with a truck pitched into it appears ahead. You think there will be a long block. Not a bit of it. Out hydraulic jacks, and away goes the truck, culvert repaired, and on goes the train within the hour. The Royal Engineers are mostly Kitchener's trained officers and thoroughly up to date. The commissariat has been excellent in quality and service. We know, because oftener than not we have no supplies for officers except army rations, beef, bread, jam, biscuit, all excellent and plentiful. The drawbacks are heat, flies, and sand storms."

There have been renewed complaints in the newspapers about the Transport Department which, it is said, is unable to find sufficient vessels to take out the men who are ready to go to the Cape. It does not appear that there is any real foundation for these stories. Faults there have been in connection with the transport, no doubt, both as regards the selection of vessels and the treatment of men and horses carried by them to South Africa. But it is far from having been demonstrated satisfactorily, or in any way proved, that the responsibility for what has happened rests with the officials at the Admiralty. It is possible that investigation, when it takes place, will wholly exonerate the department, and at least credit must be given to it for having carried out with very few mistakes an operation which no other nation could have undertaken with success. The shortcomings of the department, whatever they may be, will not, we may be certain, be overlooked by the critics, but it is comparatively easy to find fault, and it would be entirely unfair not to recognise the difficulties of an undertaking wholly unprecedented, and in its magnitude unexpected at the outset.

In the long letter from the special correspondent of the Times describing the battle of Colenso we get some important information about the doings of the naval brigade on that occasion. The guns consisted of two 4.7in. and fourteen long-range 12prs., all belonging to the Terrible and on Captain Scott's mountings. They were drawn by oxen, the big ones requiring twenty-eight each. The naval contingent consisted of 254 men, 200 of whom belonged to the Terrible. Captain Jones, of the Forte, was in command. Two days before the action the naval guns began the bombardment of the Boer position at a range of 7,200yd., and the practice was extremely good. The two larger guns are fitted with telescopic sights, designed by Captain Scott, who, it will be remembered, fitted the 4.7in. of the Scylla with similar sights, and has for many years advocated that all guns in the Navy should be so fitted. The splendid shooting of these guns has done much to demonstrate the value of these sights. The Times correspondent says: "One line of entrenchments in particular had two great gaps, each about 30yd. long, knocked in it. This was done with lyddite, the power of which was terrific. Not quite so high a percentage of the lyddite shell burst as of the ordinary kind, but this is due to the fact that the fuse of a lyddite shell cannot be charged with fulminate, and so needs to strike harder ground to cause it to detonate." Next day the naval guns moved about 1,000yd. nearer the enemy, and again shelled the trenches behind Colenso. On the day of the battle six of the guns, including the two larger ones, were moved 2,000yd. nearer, the range to the kopjes north of the Tugela being now from 3,000 to 4,000yd. Six other naval 12prs. under Lieutenant Ogilvy, of the Terrible, were placed under the command of Colonel Long, with the 14th and 66th Field Batteries to support General Hildyard.

In describing the work of this battery of 12prs. during the action, the Times correspondent says:—

Colonel Long had selected a position about 800yd. from the river and 1,200yd. from Fort Wylie—more than a mile in advance of the infantry. He had scarcely given the order to unlimber when a tremendous fire began from the entrenchments on the kopjes, from Fort Wylie, and from trenches along the river, all directed upon the two field batteries. Just behind the batteries lay a small donga, and 300yd. behind that a larger one. The naval battery, drawn by oxen, was in the middle of crossing this donga when the enemy opened fire. Two guns under Lieutenant James were already across, and they got into action behind and to the left of the field batteries. Two more were in the middle of the donga, and two more had not yet entered it. When the fire began the native drivers of the last four guns at once ran away, but the sailors manned the oxen and with great difficulty brought their guns into action behind the donga. After about an hour, when the ammunition in the limbers of the field battery had become exhausted and most of the officers and men had been wounded or killed, an order was given to retire into the donga until fresh ammunition should arrive. The naval battery then continued the bombardment alone under very heavy fire, and they remained in action entirely unsupported until nearly three hours later, when they received an order from General Buller to retire. It is extraordinary that their loss of four wounded was not greater, and there were several extraordinary escapes. Lieutenant Ogilvy after having his horse shot had three shells from a Hotchkiss pass between his legs whilst looking through his field glasses. The retirement of the naval guns was carried out with great difficulty, as they had lost thirty-two oxen and their Kafir drivers had run away. The bluejackets accomplished it, however, and only a spare ammunition waggon was left behind. This was afterwards brought in by the owner of the waggon—a Natal farmer named Pringle—who went out alone and under heavy shell fire inspanned the oxen and brought back the ammunition.

The big naval battery also did good work. It at first directed its fire entirely on Fort Wylie. Under the tremendous fire the Boers worked their guns bravely for a time, but at the end of half an hour no reply came and the bombardment ceased. One of the last projectiles fired from the 4.7in. guns, a lyddite shell, struck the corner of the fortification and knocked the whole end of the fort shapeless. It was found impossible, however, to repeat this performance on the other guns of the enemy. Several times our shells pitched right into the emplacements and burst there, and usually after that the gun was silent for from half an hour to an hour, but almost invariably at the end of that time it opened fire again. Great difficulty was found in locating many of the guns, and the position of two Hotchkiss guns could never be decided all day. As an example of the excellent practice made by the naval guns we may mention the destruction of the road bridge across the Tugela by a 4.7in. gun. At a range of 7,200yd. Chief-Petty-Officer Bates, of the Terrible, hit the centre span at the tenth round. As the whole span disappeared it is supposed that the shell detonated some mines which the Boers had placed there. An interesting point also is the mobility which has been given to these heavy guns by Captain Scott's inventive genius. The manner in which they are moved about is little short of marvellous. The latest accounts we have from Natal mention that some of these naval guns have accompanied General Buller in his advance across the Tugela at Potgieter's Drift, and they will no doubt play a very useful part in subsequent actions. In order also that full benefit should be taken of the quick-firing mechanism a system of anchoring the mountings has been devised; by means of a stout wire rope and grapnel the recoil of the mounting is prevented, the carriage being quite strong enough to allow of this.

Surgeon C. Marsh-Beadnell, of the Powerful, attached to the naval brigade with Lord Methuen's force, [whose paper on the "Decline of Scurvy Afloat" was noticed in our issue of September 16 last, contributes this month to the medical press an interesting account of the battle of Modder River, and offers various remarks regarding those employed as well as on the local surroundings. Finding that there was but little chance of any casualties with the naval brigade during the action, he obtained permission to go further to the front, where there was plenty of work to do among the wounded. To him it was a marvel that the enemy evacuated a position that was almost impregnable. Taking everything into consideration, and the fact that we got into a veritable hornet's nest, it was miraculous that our losses did not exceed 420 killed and wounded. Not many miles off, in beleaguered Kimberley, many natives are suffering from scurvy, to which they are commonly subject, but that short distance is too far for this able young naval medical officer to observe a disease that is virtually unknown in our fleet, but which he has carefully studied from the records at his disposal.

The very serious rise in the price of coal and some slight advance in the price of meat has been accepted with equanimity by the British public as a mysterious consequence of the war. In effect, these rises are purely artificial, and have little or no connection with the South African campaign. It is true the Admiralty have purchased large quantities of Welsh coal, but these purchases can only artificially affect the prices now being charged for house coal, the bulk of which comes from the north of England. How far the increased demand for ship coal may have affected the labour of the northern miners we are not qualified to judge, but there does not seem to be any possibility of a connection, and the presumption is that the coal merchants have formed the usual ring to pillage the public in midwinter. Equally unjustifiable seems to us to be the advance in the price of imported meat, as it is absurd to suppose that the trade has been injured in the least by the chartering of transports for the Government. It will thus be seen that one of the conditions of war is a marked disposition on the part of British tradesmen to profit by the national embarrassments, and for this they will not be blamed by so commercial a nation. But these artificial profits will be keenly felt by the poor none the less. The wives and children of the men now fighting for us in Africa will have to manage with smaller fires and less meat than usual.

An interesting lecture adapted to young people was delivered recently by Commander Scott Willcox at the Royal United Service Institution on "The Growth of Our Navy from A.D. 1000 to A.D. 1900." The subject of the lecture was divided into four parts—the period of wooden ships propelled by sails, of wooden ships propelled by sails and steam, of armourclads propelled by sail and steam, and of armourclads propelled by steam only. The lecture was illustrated by lantern slides thrown on a screen, affording a remarkable contrast between the various types of ships mentioned by Commander Scott Willcox. The vessels representative of the first period ranged from those in use in King Alfred's time up to the last sailing liners. In the second period there were shown the steam line-of-battleships, such as the Duke of Wellington, as well as the later wooden ships recently used in the Training Squadron. The period of sail and steam for armourclads began with the Black Prince and terminated with the Sultan; while the ships of to-day included the early turret ships like the Devastation and Inflexible, and modern battleships, cruisers, and torpedo craft. It will be remembered that last year Captain Eardley Wilmot delivered a similar lecture at the institution, and the council deserve public thanks for continuing this instructive series.

On Thursday the third-class cruiser Pandora was christened and floated out of Portsmouth Dockyard. Prayers having been said by the Rev. W. Law, dockyard chaplain, Mrs. Napier, daughter of Admiral Sir M. Culme-Seymour, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, broke the customary bottle of wine over the bows of the ship. The Pandora, which was laid down at Portsmouth on January 3, 1898, is one of two third-class unsheathed protected cruisers now building, the other, the Pioneer, being under construction at Chatham. Their principal dimensions are: Length between perpendiculars, 305ft.; length over all, 318ft. 6in.; breadth, extreme, 37ft.; mean draught of water, 13ft. 6in.; displacement, 2,200 tons. A steel deck sloped at the sides, and varying in thickness from $\frac{1}{2}$ in. to 2in., has been worked throughout the length of the ship in the neighbourhood of the water-line, forming a watertight boundary and affording protection to the engines, boilers, magazines, &c. The Pandora will be propelled by twin screws, each driven by an independent set of vertical triple-expansion engines, capable of developing, at the working pressure of 250lb. to the square inch, an indicated horse-power of 3,500 or 7,000 for the two sets of engines. With this horse-power a speed of about twenty knots will be realised. Steam will be supplied by eight water-tube boilers of the Thornycroft type. These engines and boilers are being built in Portsmouth Yard. The quantity of coal carried at the above draught is 250 tons, although provision is made for stowing a much larger amount. The armament will consist of eight 4in. quick-firing guns—two being on the fore-castle, two on the poop, and the remainder in the waist of the ship—eight 3pr. quick-firing guns, and three 4.5in. Maxims. Two above-water torpedo-tubes will be carried. These tubes will be armoured, the thickness of armour varying from 1in. to 3in. The complement of the Pandora when commissioned will be 224 officers and men.

FIRST-CLASS CERTIFICATES.—N.C.O.'s and men at home and abroad can be prepared by post for the half-yearly exams. Classes are now forming for March, 1900. Special attention is given to men who cannot attend an army school.—Randall J. Fox (ex-Army Schoolmaster), 368, Acton Lane, London, W.

Baby Personal.

Admirals Sir Henry Fairfax and Sir N. Bowden-Smith attain to-morrow the respective ages of sixty-three and sixty-two. Admiral Sir R. Tracey is sixty-three on Thursday next, and on the following day Vice-Admiral Sir J. A. Fisher completes his fifty-ninth year of age. Four flag officers, holding important appointments, thus celebrate their birthdays within the same week.

Admiral Sir J. K. E. Baird has been awarded the Good Service Pension, vacant by the death of Admiral Sir R. Macdonald. Everyone will gladly endorse this recognition of the gallant admiral's services, whose ability and good will while in command tended largely to the well being of those who were fortunate enough to serve under him.

Rear-Admiral L. A. Beaumont, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Station, and the officers of the Warspite, Phaeton, and Icarus, were entertained at a banquet on Saturday last by the President of the Republic of Guatemala.

Rear-Admiral Day H. Bosanquet, Commander-in-Chief of the East Indian Squadron, left Calcutta on Thursday last for Trincomalee and Bombay.

Captain C. H. Adair, of the Australia, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty the Queen at Osborne on Monday evening last.

Captain Sir Edward Chichester, Bart., principal transport officer in South Africa, was present at a banquet at Cape Town on Tuesday in last week, which was attended by His Excellency Sir Alfred Milner and several British officers, given by the American colony of that city in honour of Mr. William Davis, Second Secretary of the Department of the Interior, United States, then on his way to Pretoria to investigate the relations between the Boer executive and the United States Consulate. Sir Edward was accorded a most enthusiastic reception by the Americans, and Mr. Davis referred in no ordinary terms of satisfaction to the friendly attitude maintained by the gallant officer when in command of the Immortalite at a most critical period of the bombardment of Manila by Admiral Dewey.

Captain R. S. D. Cumming, of the Hermione, left Singapore on Tuesday last for Borneo with the newly-appointed governor of the territories under the Chartered Company of British North Borneo.

Captain Sackville H. Carden appears from Captain Adair's work, "Promotion and Retirement," to have a better chance of further advancement than was indicated in our notes on the last batch of promotions. He will not be forty-three until May 3 next, and according to the above-mentioned book he can reach flag rank on December 22, 1911, by the retirement of an admiral on that date. We trust that Captain Adair's calculation may be verified by the event.

Captain William Wilson, of the Anson, pays off that battleship at Devonport on the 31st inst.

Captain H. C. A. Baynes, of the Latona, left Bermuda on Saturday last with the paid-off crew of the Indefatigable for Portsmouth.

Captain Frank Finnis, of the Amphion, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last to pay off that cruiser.

Captain W. Stokes-Rees, of the Thetis, while riding a bicycle at Durban on Friday in last week, violently collided with a jirricksha, and we regret to say sustained concussion of the brain. He was removed to his ship for treatment, and it is believed that the injury will not prove serious.

Captain Charles Wyndham, of the Royal yacht Osborne, is to embark H.R.H. the Princess of Wales at Genoa in the early part of the coming month for a cruise in the Mediterranean and Levant.

Captain R. B. Farquhar, of the Nymphe, arrived at Portsmouth on Sunday last and will pay her off at that port.

Captain F. E. E. Brock, of the Highflyer, temporarily attached to Commodore E. S. Poë's squadron at Gibraltar, will probably return home early in February next and afterwards proceed to the East Indies to relieve the Eclipse. At present Captain Brock is carrying out a series of steam trials in connection with the Minerva to ascertain the relative merits of the boilers supplied to the respective cruisers.

Captain R. M. Ommanney's appointment to the Indus for duty as Staff-Captain of Devonport Yard and Queen's Harbourmaster of the Hamoaze is a new departure that largely affects the interests of those of the old navigating branch who still remain on the active list. The appointment of commanders for similar duties at Hong Kong and Jamaica foreshadowed corresponding action by the Admiralty at the home yards, and the inevitable has now been precipitated. As Captain Ommanney is borne on the books of the Indus he must necessarily attend courts-martial unless special proviso is made, the same as obtains with superintendents of dockyards, for attendance thereat would at times inconveniently affect the duties of the Staff-Captain's department. Being forty-seven years of age he may retain the appointment eight years, one year longer than the old navigators are allowed, as the latter hold civil appointments and are not borne on the books of any vessel. The undesirable custom of staff-captains wearing plain clothes while on duty is overcome by Captain Ommanney's appointment to the Indus.

Commander the Hon. H. A. Stanhope, of the Beagle, left Pernambuco on Saturday last for St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands, homeward bound.

Commander A. H. Christian, recently serving in that rank in the Niobe, relieves Commander T. B. S. Adair, of the Excellent, on the promotion of the latter officer. Both as gunnery officer and second in command he has invariably displayed considerable ability; his selection for such an important position is therefore in every respect desirable. As gunnery lieutenant of the St. George he was specially promoted Commander for his services on the West and East Coasts of Africa, and if promotion from his present appointment occurs in the usual course he may expect to attain flag rank.

Commander A. W. Torlesse, recently in command of the Royalist, has been appointed additional to the Indus to fill a vacancy in the staff-captain's department at Devonport caused by the compulsory retirement of Staff-Commander R. H. Rowe. This is the second executive officer that has been detailed for duties at a home port previously performed by officers of the old navigating branch, and will probably apply to other yards as vacancies occur.

Lieutenant W. H. Cowan, D.S.O., attached to the forces in Egypt, who accompanied the Nile expedition, 1898, and was present at the action at Atbara and the battle of Khartoum, left Cairo on Saturday last for service in South Africa.

Staff-Commander R. J. Rogers, last employed at Hong Kong, has been detailed to assist the staff-captain of Devonport Yard, the Admiralty having increased the complement to three officers in that department, the same as was allowed until 1889. The duties of the staff-captain at the western yard have been considerably increased in recent years, and will receive further additions on the completion of the extensive works and the expansion of the fleet. Staff-Commander Rogers has not been appointed to the Indus as Captain Ommanney and Commander Torlesse have been.

Engineer C. C. Sheen, of the Powerful, serving with the naval brigade at Ladysmith, was wounded last Saturday week in the general attack of the Boers on that position.

The Rev. J. H. Blunn, LL.M., Chaplain and Naval Instructor, retired, has been presented to the rectory of Frankton near Rugby.

Assistant-Paymaster W. E. R. Martin, Secretary to Commodore E. S. Poë, commanding the cruiser training squadron, obtains Paymaster's rank by seniority. He comes of a family who largely contributed to the accountant officers' branch. Until recently five were to be found on the active and retired lists; his father, who is one of them, is still active and able although on the official shelf.

Fleet-Surgeon S. Keays, of the Ramillies, remains in that vessel when recommissioned as flagship of the rear-admiral, Mediterranean fleet.

Mr. W. Cheyne Wilson, civil practitioner at Plymouth, son of the late Fleet-Surgeon J. Wilson, has been commissioned by the Admiralty for the instruction of naval medical officers in the application of Röntgen rays for surgical purposes. Classes are to be held at the Royal Naval Hospital, Stonehouse.

Colonel W. P. Wright, Supernumerary Commandant R.M.L.I. and A.A.G. Royal Marine Forces, has been awarded the Good Service Pension vacant by the death of Colonel F. V. G. Bird, R.M.L.I. Colonel Wright's valuable services to the corps, both regimentally and especially in his present staff appointment, are sufficient to entitle him to this recognition. Unfortunately, after October next he will probably be condemned to a do-nothing future as the post of D.A.G. is virtually blocked to him for the next ten years, at the expiration of which period he will be near compulsory retirement unless employment is found elsewhere for such a highly-trained and experienced officer.

Major F. J. Raitt, R.M.L.I. (Chatham), has been nominated Superintendent of Gymnasia, Southern District.

Captain F. C. Edwards, R.M.L.I. (Plymouth), has been appointed Superintendent of Gymnasia at Gibraltar, in place of Captain E. E. Chown, R.M.L.I., nominated in September last to a similar appointment at the dépôt.

Captain H. D. Palmer, R.M.L.I., Adjutant at the dépôt since 1895, has been allowed to offer himself for service with the Egyptian Army.

Captain C. W. R. Walton, R.M.L.I. (Chatham), is to relieve Captain Gilbert Drage, R.M.L.I., Instructor of Musketry at Malta for the Royal Marine forces of the Mediterranean fleet.

A branch of the Navy League has recently been formed at Singapore. The following gentlemen form the first committee: The Hon. C. Stringer, the Hon. W. R. Collyer (Attorney-General), Commander C. Q. G. Crauford, R.N., retired (master attendant), J. Anderson, Esq., W. I. Napier, Esq., G. W. Butt, Esq., H. I. Chope, Esq., J. MacLennan, Esq. The honorary secretary is E. C. Ellis, Esq., 10, Collyer-quay, Singapore.

In the report on the French Navy Estimates, just issued, the Budget Committee still declines to sanction the two battleships of 14,860 tons which are proposed to be laid down. It is believed, however, that the Superior Council of the Navy will attempt to override the wishes both of the Budget Committee and of the Minister of Marine in regard to the shipbuilding programme. An opinion widely held, is that it has been a mistake to build battleships, and that size should have given place to number. There is an article in the Yacht attempting to controvert this view, though only in regard to cruisers. Attention is drawn to the fact which we have often noted—that there is no continuity in the policy pursued by the Ministry of Marine. Hardly had the construction of wooden ships been abandoned when a set of small cruisers, now described as torpedo gunboats, such as the Condor and Epervier, were put in hand, but these, as is now recognised, have no real value for cruising purposes. The Surcouf, Troude, and others of like class followed about 1888, but these, again, have no proper cruising rôle, and are only of subsidiary value, according to Admiral de la Jaille. They have no value for distant service. At length, in 1890, the somewhat famous Dupuy de Lôme was reached, but although the admiral considers this the very best type, if greater range of action could be added, while it has won the approbation of Admiral Fournier in his book, "La Flotte Nécessaire," no other vessels of the class have been built. The cruisers of the Charner class are not so good, and it was only in the Pothuau that a speed of nineteen knots was again reached. It was then recognised that a large displacement was necessary for speed and range, and the Jeanne d'Arc with the Gloire and her sisters are the result, followed by the type cruiser of 12,400 tons now proposed in the estimates. But, apart from these, there has been a decline in the smaller ships of the Dupleix class from the standard reached. While this development has been going on, it is pointed out that the same thing has taken place in relation to protected cruisers. The argument of the writer in the Yacht is that protected cruisers are an anomaly since they are necessarily the prey of armoured vessels, except on the consideration that everything is sacrificed to steam.

The visit of General Jamont to Brest has particular relation to the proposed extension of fortifications on the island of Ushant, and possibly of Molène. Accompanied by his staff and by some naval officers, he proceeded to Ushant in the torpedo gunboat, La Hire, and disembarked at Lampaul, where he inspected the defences and the military establishments as well as the positions of certain forts which are intended to be built. It appears to be the opinion that the batteries are insufficient, and that heavily-armed forts judiciously situated and possessing some howitzer guns with many quick-firers of a smaller calibre would be extremely valuable. It is further suggested that Molène should be fortified as an outlying defence, since it might be seized and utilised as a victualling station for the destroyers of an enterprising enemy. The French seem to fear that we shall one day make a descent upon Ushant, and many of the preparations that are in view have relation to such a contingency. The question of fortifying the island has for some years been discussed, and when M. Lockroy visited Brest as Minister of Marine he proceeded to the place with the naval prefect and satisfied himself that defensive works were urgently necessary. This view appears to be held both by his successor in the Rue Royale and by the military authorities.

The Popolo Romano devotes an article to the Italian shipbuilding programme of 1899-1904. The purpose of the Government is to expedite the ships in hand in such a way that they may be completed within four years, together with two new battleships to be laid down. The Italian fleet will presently be composed of twelve battleships, of which some will only require part modification to make them completely effective and equal to the present date; but those who are most competent, the Popolo says, hold that it is necessary for Italy to possess twenty-three battleships. If this be taken as a sound basis, there are at present eleven wanting, though, when the ships in hand have been completed, only four others will be required to bring the fleet up to the required strength. It appears, however, that Admiral Bettolo is in a dilemma. In the existing conditions a period of six years will be required to complete the seven ships now building, and to augment the credits in the present financial state of the country is declared to be impossible. Admiral Bettolo and Signor Bocelli appear, therefore, to contemplate a budget expedient. The Minister will be content with laying down two additional ships if the others are completed within the quinquennium ending in 1904, and if provision is made for two other ships later. In order that the work may go on, it is proposed that the Treasury shall advance money to the Navy, to be repaid in instalments out of the money voted for naval purposes up to the year 1905. In this way there would be available during the next four years for shipbuilding and refits the sum of 164,683,447 lire, of which 118,862,367 lire would be devoted to the completion of the seven ships in hand, and the rest to the two additional. In this way the Italian fleet would possess in July, 1904, twenty-one battleships fully completed.

In a later article the Popolo Romano illustrates further the constitution of the fleet. The twelve ships alluded to above are as follows: the Andrea Doria, Dandolo, Duilio, Morosini, Italia, Lepanto, Re Umberto, Lauria, Sardegna, Scilia, Carlo Alberto, and Vettor Pisani. These date, in order of construction, from 1877 to 1899, and the estimates of 1900 propose a partial reconstruction of the Italia and Lepanto, in order to bring them up to date, by replacing their existing armour by nickel steel, thus economising weight and enabling some addition to be made to the number of quick-firing guns. The seven ships which are in hand and being completed, and four of which will take their place in the fleet during the financial year, are the Saint Bon, Emanuele Filiberto, Garibaldi, and Varese, with the Benedetto Brin, Regina Margherita, and Francesco Ferruccio, which will be ready somewhat later. The two additional ships intended to be laid down for completion in 1903-4 are of a type which is being designed by Signor Cuniberti, and of which the characteristics are not fully known.

The Dutch Naval Estimates for the present year amount to 15,959,262 gulden, of which a sum of 6,755,901 gulden will be devoted to shipbuilding, and 4,321,209 gulden to the personnel. Two armoured ships of the Holland class are to be put in hand, and the Minister has presented a programme extending over ten years. He proposes the building of three ships of the Kortenaar type and five of the Koningin Regentes class, as well as three small coast-defence ships of 2,130 tons, 850 horse-power, and a speed of ten knots. The programme also includes seven protected cruisers, three monitors, and twenty-one sea-going torpedo-boats of the French Forban class, twelve smaller torpedo-boats, fourteen gunboats, and five sloops. The total expenditure involved is 74,500,000 gulden. The armoured cruiser Noord Brabant, built at Flushing and displacing 4,000 tons, has begun her trials, and has attained a speed of 20.1 knots with 10,067 horse-power.

The plans and details of the ship which is building at Kiel for the German Antarctic expedition has been published. The vessel will be entirely of wood, the only material sufficiently strong and elastic to resist the pressure of the ice. In general shape she will be broader and rounder than the Fram, and to strengthen her against pressure a deck will be constructed almost at the water-line. Protection against floating ice will be made by adding a triple layer of oak and pine, and the bows and stern will be specially protected by bands of steel. The length of the ship will be about 46 metres, the beam from 10 to 11, and the draught 5 metres. The system of construction will enable the ship to carry coal and provisions for three years, and provides accommodation for five scientific observers, five officers, and about twenty men. The ship will be provided with electric light, and will navigate either under steam or sail. She is to be completed by May 1, 1901, and the expedition is to start at the end of August in that year.

Lieut.-Col. R. F. Robertson writes from Bray: "May I venture to suggest that the remittances from paymasters to the wives and children of reservists should, if possible, be posted regularly every Friday so as to reach the poor women concerned on each Saturday morning in time for the purchase and laying in of provisions for the Sunday and the following days. Few of these women can obtain much credit from tradesmen when there are no husbands to fall back upon, and they will manage better with a small sum than having to wait for a larger one the end of a whole month. I have written to Lord Wolseley asking whether weekly payments could not be arranged for. It will give the paymasters a little more trouble, but the most of them are married men, so they will be glad to help these poor women."

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING

BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

from FASHODA, Oct. 16, 1898, says:—
"I consider that your 'EUOPLIA' Gun is just the thing for this country, where at this season of the year all the shooting is snap-shooting, and is quite capable of accounting for anything from a guinea fowl to a lion. I have tried it on a giraffe, and it was quite satisfactory."

SIR REDVERS BULLER'S POSITION.

AS we go to press a telegram reaches us from the War Office, which was despatched by Sir Redvers Buller from Spearman's Camp on January 25, at 12.5 p.m., to the effect that Sir Charles Warren had during the night abandoned his position on Spion Kop. General Buller had heard of this news, he said, with regret. It is, of course, impossible at this distance from the seat of war, and on such fragmentary intelligence, to form any accurate judgment as to the causes which influenced General Warren's action. War, it has been said, is a puzzling game, and its moves are difficult to follow and explain. It has certainly been so in the present campaign. Since the disastrous day of Colenso, when Sir Redvers Buller's bold but hazardous frontal attack on the impregnable positions beyond the Tugela failed there has been a period of patient waiting. Various have been the surmisings as to the cause of delay. On two points all, however, have been agreed: first, that a frontal attack on a position so skilfully entrenched and stoutly defended could not be repeated; and, secondly, if Ladysmith were ever to be reached in time, the relief must be effected by strategy of a higher order than any previously practised. For days before the movement for the relief of Ladysmith began, we had been prepared for a possible turning movement via Weenen on the road passing from Estcourt to the Tugela. It was distinctly stated in telegraphic despatches, which, however, lacked official confirmation, that Sir Charles Warren's division was on a certain date in actual movement towards Weenen. There was some reason for this report being accepted as true, because a successful passage of the Tugela by the Weenen road and a rapid advance northwards would have placed a force directly across the left and left rear of the enemy's positions, threatening his northerly lines of retreat via Helpmaakar and the Biggarsberg. A military reason against a double and simultaneous turning movement by both Springfield and Weenen was manifest, having regard to the force at Sir Redvers Buller's disposal, from the risk that would be run in placing the enemy, and especially one so mobile as the Boers, on interior lines between our wings separated by some thirty-five miles. There remained the alternative of attempting a turning movement either by Springfield to the west, or by Weenen to the east. While the real intention of General Buller was to follow the former route, the outside world, including apparently the enemy, was induced to believe rather in the latter. It was not until the 10th inst., when the turning force commenced its march in a westerly direction from Frere and Chieveley that the veil was raised, and the dashing march of Lord Dundonald and his mounted brigade revealed the plan of the British commander. Leaving the infantry to follow, he seized by a rapid move the still unbroken bridge at Springfield on the Little Tugela, and pushing on beyond that point took the commanding heights of the Zwart's Kop that overlook and command Potgieter's Drift and the country on the further bank.

General Lyttelton, passing his brigade and howitzer battery unopposed over the Tugela at Potgieter's Drift during the evening and night of the 16th instant under cover of a force on Zwart's Kop, became a point of support for the right of Sir Charles Warren's force, which during the two following days crossed with slight opposition five miles to the west at Trichard's Drift, and advanced a few miles northwards, having its left covered by Lord Dundonald's cavalry feeling out towards Acton Homes, an important strategical point where converge the mountain roads from the Oliver's Noek, Bezuidenhouts, and Tintwa Passes through the Drakensbergs. From the fact that the bridge at Springfield was found intact, and both that place and the drifts unguarded, it is plain that the British general's purpose was not discovered early enough by the Boers to allow them to take effective steps for disputing the passage of either of the Tugela rivers. After the successful crossing of the drifts not a moment was lost in closing with the enemy. On the 18th, while the rear of Sir Charles Warren's column was still engaged in the passage, Lord Dundonald, moving rapidly to the left, cleared the western side of Acton Homes and took possession of some kopjes there. During the whole of the 20th and 21st Sir Charles Warren, having advanced from the river in force, maintained without intermission a steady and determined attack on the right of the Boer position, which extended eastwards from the neighbourhood of Acton Homes to a point three or four miles north of the position taken up by General Lyttelton's brigade north of Potgieter's Drift. The enemy's position consisted of a series of kopjes flanking to the east and west the formidable and commanding hill known as Spion Kop. The results of the two days' fighting were the capture in succession of several kopjes and the swinging round of Sir Charles Warren's left, supported by General Hildyard, about a couple of miles to the eastward. General Lyttelton's brigade on Sir Redvers Buller's right thus performed during the fighting the double function of holding by active demonstration the front of the enemy's main position, and of serving as a pivot and support on which Sir Charles Warren could swing round his three brigades.

The advance, which on the second day of operations became more distinctly a turning movement round the enemy's right, was slow and arduous in the extreme. The resistance offered by the Boers was as stubborn as we have now come to expect from so formidable a foe, and the unvarying uphill character of the country, thickly strewn at every step with boulders offering excellent cover for defence, gave our infantry a task that must have tried their endurance to the utmost. Covered by a powerful artillery, which was handled with discretion and skill, and taking full advantage of the natural cover, they pressed the enemy steadily back, contesting every yard of the way. On the 23rd inst., during the course of which another kopje was cleared of the enemy, a despatch received from Sir Redvers Buller located the relative positions of Sir Charles Warren's force and of the enemy after Sunday's engagement. In front of the former the Boers were entrenched, 1,400yd. off, on commanding ground west of Spion Kop, approachable only over bare and open slopes. The British commander continued to shell the enemy, and he announced his intention of attempting that same night to seize the salient point of Spion Kop, which formed the left of the position facing Trichard's Drift. Spion Kop, of which mention has been so frequent, has an altitude of some 4,800ft. It was supposed to command the whole of the Boer entrenchments, and was pronounced by Sir Charles Warren the key of the position. News of its capture was eagerly awaited, and intense satisfaction was caused at mid-day on Thursday when a despatch from Sir Redvers Buller announced that on the night of the 23rd Warren's troops had occupied that natural stronghold, surprising "the small garrison, who fled." It may be imagined, therefore, with what feelings the public have just heard that for some reason quite unexplained General Warren thought it expedient to withdraw during the night of Thursday. We can only venture to hope that some development of the tactics of other commanders has influenced him in adopting a measure which clearly has not met with the approval of the officer in chief command, who would otherwise not have learnt, as he says, of General Warren's action with regret. The data in our possession are so meagre and incomplete that it is difficult to estimate either the actual strength of Sir Redvers Buller's army or the means he has available for reinforcing the fighting line. All that we do know at the time of writing is that in the immediate rear of the fighting force flows the Tugela, with its numerous drifts, all of which must be properly guarded. From Springfield to Frere, the base of supply on the Natal railway, the distance is about eighteen miles. In front of Frere, five miles to the north, lies Chieveley camp, held by General Barton's brigade, detailed for the important duties of holding the enemy in his entrenched positions north of Colenso and of securing the railway to the south. A general survey of the situation compels us to doubt whether we have anything like a sufficient force at the front to ensure early and complete success, and makes us regret that we do not possess an independent and mobile division to operate north of the Tugela by Estcourt and Weenen. The effect of such a diversion could not fail to divide the enemy's forces, relieve the pressure on General Buller's front, facilitate the relief of Ladysmith, and hasten the retreat northwards of the enemy with the probable loss of his heavy guns and the capture of many prisoners. It seems to us that even yet we are quite underestimating the strength and capacity of the enemy, and Sir Redvers Buller's own despatches are not of a nature to ease the public mind. That our generals are doing their utmost goes without saying, but the public will not be satisfied, we feel sure, until they know for a fact who is responsible for the two great errors of the campaign—the insufficiency of cavalry and artillery, in comparison to which all other faults are as nothing.

From other parts of the extended field there is little to record. At Modder River the daily duel of heavy guns has lately been varied by reconnaissances in force towards the enemy's lines. The last of these was made on the 22nd inst. in the direction of Magersfontein, when the Boer position was approached to a point 1,000yd. beyond our big-gun emplacements. The enemy was found to be in great strength. The evident objects of these reconnaissances are to relieve the pressure on Kimberley, which has been bombarded lately with increased activity, and to make Cronje apprehensive of an attack in force and less disposed than he might otherwise be to detach any part of his burghers to reinforce the commandoes at Ladysmith or Colesberg. General French continues to work his way further eastwards, with the two-fold object of completing his circle of investment round Colesberg and of obtaining possession of the approach to Norval's Pont. A small column of British started on the 21st inst. from Orange River in the direction of Douglas in conjunction with a movement from Modder River. The object of this operation is not yet quite apparent. General Gatacre, being less mobile than General French, makes less progress, but he loses no ground. From the vicinity of Steynberg, through Stormberg, to Dordrecht the enemy in his front occupies a series of positions, and has lately been actively engaged in dismantling the lines of rail in the neighbourhood of those places. With infinite patience Colonel Plumer perseveres in his endeavour to push his way to the south towards Mafeking. By the 17th inst. his armoured trains and mounted riflemen had reached a point some miles south of Gaberones Station. The fort at that place was in his hands, as well as Basuto Kopje in the vicinity of the Boer position at Crocodile Pools. Should this little flying column, disregarding its base, and depending on the risky protection of armoured trains on a line that has to be repaired mile by mile as it moves along, be successful Colonel Plumer will have performed a feat that it will be difficult to beat even in this war so fertile in acts of individual boldness and resource. A survey of the situation makes it clear that even yet the British forces do little more than hold their own, and that the urgent necessity for reinforcements, particularly mounted men and guns, still continues.

LORD LANSDOWNE.

THE attacks on Lord Lansdowne continue, but the more we read in the shape of criticism of the Minister for War the more we are disposed to think that these attacks are most ill-judged, not to say unfair. We have never considered and never said that the War Office is an ideal department of State. Its faults are many; but to make Lord Lansdowne now the scapegoat, as some would do, for all its defects is monstrous. It was only two years ago that the public began to regard the affairs of its Army at all seriously. It suddenly dawned upon them at the beginning of 1898 that things were not as they should be, that the Army was not strong enough for the work it has to do, and that the time had arrived for bringing about an augmentation of our available forces. Lord Lansdowne bowed to the public will, then for the first time expressed in any definite form, and the result was a series of changes of system, all but one of which the Army heartily approved. A decision was come to to add batteries of field artillery and new battalions of infantry, some of which have already been raised. At the same time measures were adopted having for their object the reform of the War Office itself. Lord Lansdowne, we venture to think, did his best. He was seriously hampered by questions of finance, but he succeeded in inducing the Cabinet to provide some of the money required. Large votes were taken for barracks, and the condition of the soldier was materially improved, whilst an effort was also made to face the all-important question of guns. Under the pressure of public opinion the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, it will be remembered, had spoken rather glibly at the outset, was brought through Lord Lansdowne's efforts to realise that the War Office required to be supported. The difficulty in South Africa came a year later, and the War Office was unprepared, as all who had studied the subject of defence with any attention knew well it would be if difficulties arose to put a strain on our too limited resources. To say now, as his lordship's critics do, that the fault for our unpreparedness rests wholly with the Secretary of State for War is the height of injustice. Lord Lansdowne may not be the ablest Minister of War that the world has produced; he may be weak, as is contended; he may be wanting in appreciation of the responsibilities of his office. For the sake of argument, but for argument's sake only, we will grant all this; but we are satisfied to judge him from the standpoint of those who have gone before, and taking their records and comparing them with his we fail to find that he has in any way fallen short of the standard which the public have been willing hitherto to accept.

It has been Lord Lansdowne's misfortune to find himself the responsible Minister on the occasion of the first big war in which we have been involved for over forty years. During that long period of comparative inaction the nation has been satisfied enough to live in a veritable fool's paradise. The Army having been systematically neglected, successive Chancellors of the Exchequer have been allowed to make reputations for themselves and the governments to which they have belonged, and to satisfy the taxpayer by producing popular budgets. The press, which until lately has done nothing to represent the dangers of this policy, now rises in righteous indignation and affirms that it is all the fault of Lord Lansdowne. "Away with him," they cry, "he has been tried and found wanting." We can imagine no condition of things more inconsistent and lowering to our dignity as a nation. In periods of peace we are apt to be very boastful. We have created a strong and efficient Navy, and we have been satisfied to think that that was all we wanted. With it we imagined that we could face the world. It has now been brought home to us that we require an Army also, not one or two but four or five complete army corps. These we have not got; we object to anything in the shape of enforced military service, we will not even submit to a ballot for the Militia. We are beginning to realise that we cannot go on longer as we have done accumulating wealth and adopting no proper measures for its protection. The occasion is one which demands a scapegoat, and as Lord Lansdowne happens to be Minister for War the idea is apparently to "go for him." That is what the attacks on Lord Lansdowne really come to. We say unhesitatingly that this device is a mean one and unworthy of an honourable and fair-dealing people. The fault for our present condition of unreadiness does not rest with Lord Lansdowne, it rests with the British taxpayer; and we are astonished—nay, pained—to find journals usually marked by sound judgment, papers even of the standing of the Spectator, which is not given to the insertion of irresponsible opinions as a rule, writing as it did on Saturday last: "Lord Lansdowne has been Minister for War for nearly five years. During that time he has been supreme; and yet during that time he has not given us an Army which can by any possibility be called an effective fighting machine." And therefore he is to be got rid of at once if he does not voluntarily resign. Could any argument be more far-fetched and absurd?

Lord Lansdowne, we venture to say, with his experience in Canada and India, would have been only too willing to have provided the Army which his critics require, but if he had proposed the measures which are necessary what would have been his fate? It would have meant one of two things—enforced military service or vastly increased expenditure. Was the nation prepared for any such heroic policy? We answer emphatically, no. The matter resolves itself into this: the Minister for War is blamed because he has not been in a position to do impossibilities. Will the critics all support the Government in bringing about the end they desire? If so all may come well. But we have our doubts. Sooner or later we shall have to look facts in the face, but we are disposed to think that many of those who are now demanding a strong and efficient Army would be found on the other side if the Government were to propose the vital reforms so urgently needed. Lord Lansdowne, we hold, has done as well as any minister could have done in the circumstances. He may not have been an ideal Minister for War, but the Army at least recognises in him a minister who has striven conscientiously to repair errors of system and meet many of its more pressing demands. There have been great faults committed in South Africa, but it has yet to be shown that the War Minister has been wholly responsible, and until that responsibility has been fixed, it is scarcely consistent with the principles of justice to lay the blame on one pair of shoulders. Nor is it wise for the press, which can do so much to educate public opinion, to go out of its way, as it is doing, to create complications. Lord Lansdowne may or may not be to blame, but when doubts exist it is not usual for practical men of the world to fix on one particular individual and demand his immediate punishment. Any case so prejudged is bound to result in disaster. What we require to do now is to keep cool heads and await the explanation which Ministers will doubtless give in the proper place and in due season. The hysterical cry of "Down with Lord Lansdowne," if persisted in, will do incalculable harm, showing as it does how unfitted some of his lordship's critics are to criticise at all, for no man who has followed the progress of Army reform for the last forty years could conscientiously say that our present Minister for War has done worse in office than those who have gone before him. On the whole we venture to say he has done better; and we hold no brief for Lord Lansdowne, our opinion being absolutely independent.

Army Notes.

The paucity of horse and field artillery guns with our commands now operating in South Africa has been brought to notice before in these columns, but the subject is one of such vital importance to the field forces at the front that no apology need be offered for again putting it prominently forward. The total number of British troops actually in South Africa at the date of writing, exclusive of garrison artillery, which forms no part of a field army, and also exclusive of the Army Service, Royal Army Medical, and Army Ordnance Corps, may be taken to be in round numbers 100,000. This force includes seven batteries of Royal Horse Artillery, having forty-two guns, and thirty-two batteries of Royal Field Artillery, having 192 guns, giving credit for the full number of guns in the 14th and 66th Batteries which were put out of action at Colenso, but may possibly have been reconstituted. The total number of guns is therefore 234 for a force of 100,000 combatants, giving the proportion of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ guns to every 1,000, or seven guns to every 3,000 fighting men. The lowest recognised proportion is nine for that number of combatants, and the lowest proportion now generally advocated is twelve; that is, four per 1,000, while some authorities on the subject go as high as five per 1,000, having regard to the enormous difficulties now facing infantry in the attack of positions defended by magazine rifles and quick-firing guns, and the absolute necessity of keeping down the defenders' fire by as powerful an artillery as can be brought to bear on the points attacked. It will be seen that at the lowest proportion of three guns per 1,000 combatants, there is an actual deficiency now at the front of sixty-six guns; and at the higher, and generally accepted proportion of four per 1,000, the deficiency reaches the serious total of 166 guns, or nearly twenty-eight batteries. It is evident that the fresh batteries now being despatched to the seat of war will fail to satisfy requirements, since they will merely furnish guns for the additional troops going out.

In addition to the batteries above referred to as actually being in South Africa, there are two horse and twelve field batteries now on their way or on the point of embarking. There will remain in the United Kingdom when they have gone no more than three horse and fifteen field batteries, having a total of 108 guns. At the same time the Volunteer Artillery, on whom the country has in the absence of the Regulars to depend for artillery defence, are without field guns, having only position guns of obsolete types, some breech-loaders, some muzzle-loaders. If it be true, as was stated, that the War Office has purchased abroad to replace at home the greater part of the batteries sent to South Africa, forty batteries, the guns of which, moreover, are not quick-firers, and therefore are not of the latest type, the arrangement can only be accepted as a proof that we have no adequate reserves of guns in this country. It has been a leading principle of the War Office for years to keep reserves at the lowest possible ebb, in view of the rapid changes and the progress being constantly made in ordnance. Another guiding principle has been to lag behind foreign governments in the matter of rearmament lest we might find ourselves with a weapon a degree inferior to that of one or other of our great military neighbours. The result of this policy of excessive caution has proved unfortunate, for we have found ourselves with a serious war sprung upon us without either a reserve of field guns or a field gun of modern type. These considerations lead us a step farther. One of the lessons already inculcated by the war is that to reduce an enemy capable of transforming hills into practical fortifications, seamed with terraced trenches and guarded by position guns, and even by heavy siege pieces securely posted on emplacements protected by heavy parapets, the artillery of the attack must possess a proportion of guns of position; that is to say, ordnance with more battering power than any field piece possesses, and throwing shells by direct fire, to demolish the gun defences of the enemy. This is a work that cannot be accomplished by howitzers with their high-angle fire but comparatively low battering power. The corps artillery of an army corps should therefore include a battery of long-range battering guns of position in addition to the howitzer battery lately added to its establishment.

Osman Digna, who was hiding in the hills near Tokar, was captured on the 19th inst. by a party sent out from Suakin by Major Godden, under Lieutenant Burges, Gloucestershire Regiment, and Mohammed Ahmed, the Chief of Police.

In an interesting letter from the front published a few days ago, a Times correspondent discussed the question of Kimberley and the war. Unlike De Aar and Colesberg, the town has no strategical importance; yet the efforts of the Boers in the Orange River region have been mainly directed towards its capture for fully three months. That is to say, it has been invested by a large army, under one of the ablest generals the Republics can produce, while strong positions to the south have been entrusted to small commandoes. The soldierly qualities of the Boers being so well known, it is idle to look for the cause in their plan of campaign. They have simply allowed their interests to play a subordinate part to their hatred. Kimberley is the centre of the diamond industry, the city identified with the rise of Mr. Rhodes as a financier and millionaire. In this man the Boer sees the representative of the Power they fear. He is not so much a man as the embodiment of a principle and a force. In other words, he, not Mr. Chamberlain or Sir Alfred Milner, stands to the enemy for England; hence he is hated on political rather than on personal grounds, and in such measure that he has proved a factor in the war of the first magnitude. When it was known that he was in Kimberley, fault was found with him because his presence there would inevitably attract the Boers to the town. Exactly; and seldom has a statesman unconsciously served his country better. In their anxiety to capture their arch enemy and destroy the source of his wealth the Boers forgot every other consideration, or perhaps imagined that they would capture the place immediately. Had they done so they could have destroyed the trunk railway of the old colony, when our troops would have had to march across a country as large as France, seamed with treason and destitute of water. The determined resistance of Kimberley and the tenacity of the besiegers saved us from little short of a calamity. There is a reason for the defective strategy of the Boers; can we say as much for ours? Instead of one army inactive in the neighbourhood of Kimberley there are now two.

Every general in turn has publicly complimented the colonial troops on their gallantry, and now comes the news that Trooper Farmer, of the Natal Carabiniers, has been recommended for the Victoria Cross on account of his conspicuous bravery in the battle of Colenso. Through a hail of cross fire he went to the assistance of an officer, and carried him a distance of fifty yards into a donga. He is the first V.C. of the Carabiniers, though not of Natalians, as two of them were among the most heroic of the defenders of Rorke's Drift, and were decorated with the proudest distinction a British subject can wear some months afterwards. Trooper Farmer is the sixteenth colonial V.C. Nine have been won by South Africans, two by Canadians, three by West Indian negroes, and one after Imperial legislation was passed for the purpose has been bestowed on a New Zealander. The Cape Mounted Rifles hold three, the Frontier Light Horse two, Nourse's Horse one, and the Cape Mounted Yeomanry another. The first colonial to win the V.C. was Colonel Dunn, the only one of the Light Brigade who was so decorated for bravery in the famous charge. The only colonials who, from the nature of their development, have done nothing to merit the cross of valour are the Australians. So anxious are they to win at least one on the battlefields of South Africa that £50 a year is to be paid for life to the man who earns it. Never before in their history have they had an opportunity, for the New South Wales contingent in the Soudan arrived too late to take any conspicuous part in actual fighting.

The formation of a colonial brigade under Colonel Brabant is a move of the utmost significance which we owe to Lord Roberts. It is to include the existing irregular corps and mounted volunteers in the Cape Colony, together with a further body of 1,500 light horse to be raised at once. No doubt a similar compliment will be paid to Natal, which, in addition to the number she has already sent to the front, is eager to organise another corps from among her best colonists. It must be particularly galling to men whose homes have been ruined and property destroyed to find their advice taken only after three months of reverses and disappointments. The authorities even now seem to see less plainly than the Army at large the value of infantry; that infantry has its limitations, especially when it is not sufficiently supported by artillery. The services of the colonial troops and their excellent fighting quality have impressed thinking soldiers no less than the fighting quality of the Boers. Fortunately Lord Roberts has been equally impressed, mounted troops may be expected to do great things, especially when the campaign enters on its final stage. In the Transvaal and Orange Free State mobility and knowledge of the country which the colonials possess will be of the utmost value; for there is not the slightest doubt that the struggle will be continued with even more pronounced South African features than heretofore the moment the Boer is driven within his own territory. Looking to the future, there is stronger reason for employing every colonial who is willing and capable. When the war is over they will be the best guarantee for peace. With a large force of soldier colonists on the spot, who can be organised at a few days' notice, the danger of a future rising will be remote, and the necessity of a large garrison obviated.

The response of the country to the call for volunteers is all that could be desired, and worthy of our best traditions; but enthusiasm should not be allowed to carry away our sober sense. For a variety of reasons the Regular Army in South Africa has not been able to accomplish all that was expected of it when the war broke out. It has suffered heavy losses, and has not been able to drive the enemy within his own borders. As week succeeded week the public saw more and more clearly that, besides artillery, our generals were sadly deficient in mounted infantry and cavalry. Even more illuminating was the brilliant work done by the colonials, especially the Natal Carabiniers and Imperial Light Horse. With the call for reinforcements the nation turned to the Yeomanry. Only a few short months ago infantrymen were to carry all before them; the Boers we were assured were but men with muskets. Now all would seem to be changing. What our men suffer from is lack of mobility, want of local knowledge, and ignorance of Boer tactics. Will our Yeomanry troopers fare better in this respect? It was supposed that the superior discipline and training of our troops would compensate for the disadvantages under which they have laboured, and to a certain extent they have. The yeoman, it is true, will have mobility in his favour, but the other defects will be as marked in him as they are in the infantry soldier, if not more so. The kind of life which produces the Boer is impossible in almost any European country. This is a fact of which continental critics seem quite forgetful. The rough-riders of our colonies are the only men who can meet the Boer on equal terms and beat him. He has admitted as much himself. To be a good rider and shot at home is a very different matter from being a good rider and shot on the South African veldt, in the Australian bush, or on the vast plains of Canada. Men and horses in the colonies are fresh when an Englishman, a Frenchman, or a German and his horse would be completely done up. Moreover, the senses of a bushman are as acute as a native's, and he is in the habit of acting on his own responsibility. For these reasons too much must not be expected of the English Yeomanry at first, and for these reasons most of the continental expressions of opinion one reads on the conduct of the war are not worth the paper they are written upon.

Colonel Long has been generally blamed for having lost his guns at the battle of Colenso. It is quite unfair to criticise in this irresponsible manner. Colonel Long is one of our best-known gunners. He fully established a reputation for himself in the actions fought in 1898, both at Athara and Omdurman, having commanded the artillery on both occasions. It is complained of him now that he ought not to have taken his guns into so dangerous a position. But it has yet to be shown that he acted without orders. There is nothing to justify the supposition that he did; indeed, there is everything to support the presumption that he did not, he being a trained artillery officer of considerable experience. Naturally he would suppose that the position which he was directed to take up had been properly reconnoitred. It is not for gunners to do the work of cavalry; what they are required to do is to handle their guns and use them with effect. That it should be said, "Oh, it was Colonel Long's fault that the action of the Colenso was lost" does seem to us to be manifestly unfair. Without official despatches before us it is, of course, impossible to fix responsibility properly, but so far as we can judge, keeping in view the true functions of artillery, we fail to see how Colonel Long can well be said to have been to blame for the disaster on the Tugela, unless, of course, some new ideas have been originated in this campaign, where so many strange things have unquestionably been done, that, in addition to their work as gunners, artillerymen are in future to combine the duties of cavalry also. If an officer commanding a brigade, division, or battery of artillery is told to take his guns and occupy a certain position, he supposes that that position has been thoroughly exploited before the instruction come to him. It is not for him in the excitement of an action to send for information on that point, he takes the fact as granted. His guns are directed to advance at all speed; and advance they do accordingly, the necessary ground scouting having been done. This is, no doubt, what happened on the Tugela; but now, because the guns were unfortunately lost, it has become quite usual for people who know nothing about warfare at all to speak in the most disparaging terms of the Royal Artillery, and say that the officers of that arm need to be taught their business. Naturally, artillery officers resent this one-sided and very unfair view, anxious as they are not to cast blame on other shoulders. Right is right, and in the absence of any official explanation that the position has been properly reconnoitred it is as well to remove erroneous impressions as to the functions of artillery in modern war, as these are evidently not as fully understood as one would have supposed them to be, and blame is made to rest by inference upon those who we are disposed to think do not deserve to bear it.

For the time "The Absent-Minded Beggar" is the overpowering music-hall anthem, the pet song and chorus of the street, the bar, and the tap-room, and it would be taken as a token of Krugerism if in any public gathering question were made of the fitness of the sentiment or of the niceness of the words of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's spirited verse. Yes! spirited indeed, but is the sentiment very dignified? Is it justly applicable to the soldiers of the Queen? Does it elevate the Army in the eyes of the world to hold up the private as a thriftless scamp whose children, if he has any, or whose wife and relatives should become objects of charity because he is "an absent-minded beggar" freed from every claim upon him when he has taken service in the ranks? A distinguished veteran, who is a soldier's friend indeed, has written an indignant protest against what he terms the "vulgarisation and depreciation" of the soldier and his status by the nauseating caddishness of the abstract idea of "Tommy Atkins" and of the concrete "absent-minded beggar," and expresses the strongest opinion that, notwithstanding the pecuniary results of extraordinary popularity, "no good" has accrued to the country from the "slap on the back," the "standing drinks," and the familiarity of the man in the street with the man in uniform. But no one can doubt the good of the rapprochement in the main. There are far-reaching results to be expected, but it would be unwise to accept the enthusiasm of the colonies for service against the Boers as evidence of the amalgamation of the various dominions, principalities, and powers under the Colonial Office into a federated empire. This may be the most formidable war that England was ever engaged in, as Lord Rosebery said. We do not think so by any means, because if the worst came to the worst and terms were made with the two Republics, England would not suffer such a loss as she did when Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown, and the thirteen rebel colonies became the United States of North America; but we admit that England has never put forth such a prodigious force against such an inferior enemy, and that abandonment of the war with the Republics in South Africa would be felt as a grievous humiliation by our fellow subjects and as a welcome disaster by our very numerous enemies all over the world. That will never be, yet it would be as well if we did nothing to make people wish it could be, but the heat of this contest has inflamed the press and filled the columns of our papers with lava-like leaders and volumes of fiery pumice. Our soldiers may well be content with the laudations they have received from the Queen and the country.

Our correspondent who wrote to us last week on the subject of the universities and military service in a letter received on Wednesday says: "I have been assured by some old Oxford friends that I have exaggerated the situation, and that under pressure of circumstances Oxford would do its duty. Well, there is a pressure of circumstances now, and what do we find? I cut the following paragraph from the Morning Post of to-day:—

'Oxfordshire having failed to supply its full quota of the half-company of Volunteers required to reinforce the 1st Batn. Oxfordshire Light Infantry at the front, the 1st Bucks Rifle Volunteers were asked to supply twenty-five more men. The request was received in High Wycombe on Monday night, when at a muster of the local detachment of the battalion thirteen men offered themselves, though the detachment has already furnished its proper quota of the Bucks half-company.'

I ask, could anything be more disgraceful than this to the University of Oxford? I find I owe an apology to the University of Cambridge, for I hear from that seat of learning that the utmost enthusiasm prevailed when the contingent left last Saturday for the front, the whole university having turned out to see the men off, and that there the Volunteer battalion is up to strength, and it is considered anything but bad form to belong to the C.U.R.V. On the contrary, any undergraduate not doing so is thought to be a poor creature. We have to take facts as we find them. Cambridge furnished nearly a third of the whole contingent required, and would have found more if required. Oxford cannot produce anything like its quota. Learning is not everything in this world. What can the Army think of the University of Oxford? What can our colonists think? What can Englishmen generally think when such is the spirit displayed in a crisis like the present? We trust that the University of Oxford will take immediate steps to remedy a state of things which in the present state of public feeling cannot fail to injure its prestige immensely. Having regard to the efforts being made on all sides to show how deep-rooted the feeling of patriotism is throughout the Empire it is the duty of the university authorities to do something to introduce a healthier feeling among those over whom they preside. If they fail to do so we venture to say that the effect will be most injurious in more senses than one.

The exhaustive experiments made with the Colt gun at Runnymede on Tuesday have astonished the officers of the Imperial Yeomanry, many of whom were apparently unaware of its death-dealing qualities, while the Pall Mall Gazette pays a well-merited tribute to its mobility and destructiveness. The Dundonald galloping carriage, too—the invention of the gallant soldier whose name has been so much before the public during the last few days—came in for much admiration; the rapidity of movement and the marvellous manner in which the carriage negotiated gradients, mounds, and other natural obstacles without starting a bolt or getting damaged was commented on with amazement. Two or three important improvements have been made in the carriage, and it is now well-nigh perfect. The simplicity of the Colt construction was strikingly exemplified, the whole weapon being stripped and the parts "reassembled" in less than one minute and a half. It is still more wonderful to note the harnessing of the Dundonald carriage, which according to the following, from the pen of the Pall Mall expert, was a superb piece of work: "It was suggested by an artillery officer present that the horse should be supposed to be shot, and that a fresh horse should be put in its place to take the gun out of action. This was done without any previous practice or drill in under two minutes, and could be done in half the time with practice." Further experiments will take place shortly. Meanwhile many of the Yeomanry regiments are equipping themselves with the weapon.

The committee of the Royal Military Tournament have decided that in the tournament of the present year battalions of embodied Militia shall be placed on the same footing as Regulars.

The 4th, 7th, 8th, and 16th Bengal Cavalry are about to be converted into lancer regiments.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In the bewildering excitement caused by the state of things in South Africa, it is assumed that our military system is wholly wrong and must be wholly changed. I venture respectfully to dispute this view of the military situation. It is not our military system, but its administration, and non-administration, that are in fault. Let me give an instance of each. Our deficiencies in guns are due to maladministration, while the utterly discreditable incompleteness of our Militia as to numbers, and the total absence of a Militia reserve, are due to the non-administration of the Militia law.

As to deficiencies in guns, &c., I shall not dwell thereon further than to say that we had big field guns of position 40 years ago, whereas we have not got them now. For this, and the like, I hold the War Office in all its branches, civil and military, successive Secretaries of State for War, and successive Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to be responsible. But on the Militia deficiency I crave leave to speak more fully. Our existing military system I believe to be admirably suited to our Imperial position and wants. What is it? (1) An Army raised by voluntary enlistment liable to serve anywhere in or out of the kingdom; (2) an Army Reserve of men who have served their time in the Regular Army and have entered the Reserve—now, I believe, about 80,000 strong; and, finally, an Army Militia Reserve 30,000 strong, composed of men serving in the Militia, but liable at any time while so serving for service in the Regular Army. Further, the Regular Army can be unlimitedly increased by the offer of sufficient inducements to enlist.

Then we have the Militia itself, and lastly the Volunteers. But there is unfortunately a rift in the lute, and everything is now out of tune. And what is this rift? Why, the non-administration of our military system itself, for that which is its proper basis, on which it theoretically rests, viz., compulsory service in the Militia for home defence, is wholly wanting. Thus the whole machinery is out of gear. The Militia competes with the Army for recruits while it is itself never by 20,000 to 30,000 full. The Militia Army Reserve, intended to be in excess of the Militia, forms part of the Militia, and the power of raising a Militia Reserve of 60,000 men is never exercised. Lastly, we have the Volunteer force, the existence of which is the salve our War Office administrators, or rather non-administrators, apply to their consciences for their cowardly, vote-fearing, treasonable neglect of their duty in not applying—but annually suspending—the constitutional law of compulsory service for home defence. Now, were this ancient, but annually suspended, law put in force, even in the most modified form possible, the Militia would no longer compete with the Army for recruits, and the Militia itself would be full. We should also have a Militia Reserve of 60,000 men, while for every man who entered the Militia Army Reserve another would be raised. Further, the Volunteer force could be brought up to any required standard of efficiency, while we might also have a strong Volunteer Reserve. All difficulties, moreover, as regards the officering of the Militia and Volunteers would cease, as our golden youth would prefer serving voluntarily as officers in the Militia or Volunteers to the chance of forced service as privates in the Militia.

So pray let us not condemn our military system until it has been properly and fully administered, tried, and failed.

WEMYSS.

23, St. James's-place, S.W., Jan. 22.

P.S.—It is surely a libel on our nation to assume, as our rulers do, that the people of this free country would not submit to the enforcement of the existing constitutional military law of compulsory service for the defence and security of their fatherland and homes.

Army Personal.

To-day will be laid to rest in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, the remains of Major-General His Highness the Duke of Teck, who died rather suddenly at White Lodge, Richmond Park, on Sunday evening last after a long illness. The sympathy of the whole Army will have gone forth to the Duchess of York and Princes Adolphus, Francis and Alexander of Teck in their sad bereavement.

Major-General G. Upton Prior has been appointed to the temporary command of the Curragh District.

Major-General C. C. Hogg, C.B., Bombay Cavalry, is permitted to reside out of India.

Colonel F. W. Benson, late 17th Lancers, and J. C. Barker, R.E., have been appointed A.A.G.'s for transport at the Cape, and Major Count Gleichen a D.A.A.G.

A telegram has been received from Colonel Bruce Hamilton, A.A.G. to Lieut.-General Sir Francis Clery, who was wounded in action the other day, to the effect that he is going on satisfactorily and hopes to resume his duties next week.

Colonel H. D. Williams, half pay, late North Staffordshire Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the 38th-98th Regimental District, Lichfield, vice Colonel J. H. H. Prior.

Colonel W. R. le G. Anderson, I.S.C., Controller of Military Accounts, has had his appointment renewed for five years.

Lieut.-Colonel L. J. Torrie, 22nd Madras Infantry, has been granted an extension of command for two years.

Lieut.-Colonel T. R. Macpherson, I.S.C., is about to retire on a pension of £500 a year.

Major T. D. Inglis, retired list, R.A., has been appointed Brigade-Major of the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness.

Major A. H. Randolph, retired list, R.E., a major of Jan. 1, 1895, has been selected to act as Assistant-Inspector of Submarine Defence at headquarters during the absence in South Africa of Major P. R. Burn-Murdoch, R.E.

Major F. D. Lumley, 1st Batn. Middlesex Regiment, accompanied Lieut.-General C. Tucker, C.B., from India to South Africa as A.D.C.

Major G. E. Even, I.S.C., 30th Bombay Infantry, has been appointed to the command of the 27th Bombay Infantry, vice Colonel W. A. Broome, vacated.

Major W. Stewart, I.S.C. (10th Bengal Lancers), is about to retire on pension.

Captain C. W. Clark, R.G.A., has been appointed Brigade-Major, R.A., South-Eastern District.

Captain W. G. Gwatkin, Manchester Regiment, is appointed D.A.A.G., headquarters.

Captain N. C. Taylor, 14th Bengal Lancers, has been appointed Adjutant of Lumsden's Horse for service in South Africa. Captains L. H. Noblett, 1st Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, and J. H. B. Beresford, 3rd Sikhs, accompany the force.

Captains F. H. B. Cmmeline, H. Patterson, C. Bailey, and A. G. Maxwell, I.S.C., are proceeding to South Africa from India in charge of 1,260 horses which have been given by sixteen native princes for the use of the British forces.

Lieutenant R. J. T. Digby-Jones, R.E., killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst., was to have been recommended for the Victoria Cross for distinguished gallantry had he survived. He for some time heroically held a position with a few men against tremendous odds, shooting three men himself and clubbing a fourth, but later in the day fell mortally wounded. "His name, however, will stand out in the history of the siege of Ladysmith," a correspondent says, "as one who set a brilliant example to all about him and brought no little credit on the corps of Royal Engineers. He did his duty nobly to the end."

To be Assistant-Principals, War Office: Mr. E. J. Riley, of the Army Contracts Department; Mr. A. C. Pealey, of the Pay Division; and Mr. F. W. Askham, of the Auxiliary Forces Division.

A VETERAN ON THE WAR.

FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

"I have been thinking," said Major von Blutwitz as he rammed a great fill of canaster into his long-bowled pipe and adjusted his frayed-out dressing gown to shelter his attenuated legs, "that you English people do not quite grasp one of the reasons why this South African war does all continental statesmen so greatly fascinate.

"Have you, my good friend, not at some time in your life a lecture on experimental chemistry attended? So! then have you seen the professor some various gases or fluids, from different vessels, commingle with no apparent result. Suddenly he passes an electric spark through his retort, and in an instant a new compound, with new forces and potentialities, before your eyes is evolved. Now that is what the longer heads in Berlin, Paris, and all other great capitals now behold to be taking place in the evolution of the British Empire. Great Britain and her colonies are represented by the diverse gases; the fiercely-raging contest is the electric spark generating new affinities and consequences of an unknown potency.

"For look you, be the struggle long or short, yet in one sense has it already proved the greatest possible success, the very crowning to you of the century. For a great idea which might have perished of inanition has by the baptism of blood and fire unexpectedly been cemented into a tremendous reality.

"See now how it strikes your enemies, enviers, and detractors. Do you think they do not perceive the new portent, that they do not recognise the handwriting on the wall? Not so blind, my friend, believe me. In apprehension and bewilderment is the union of Great Britain and her colonies beheld as were the awful characters blazing out on the wall in the palace of Belsazzar.

"For consider what it means to your race, your polity, your language—a supreme future before which all rivalry shall fail, wither, and collapse. Hitherto between you and your great colonies there were doubtless certain ties of interest and sentiment due to your common descent, but now the high test of war, the strain, the sacrifices, the suffering, and the glory which you share in common shall prove a bond of union faster than any statesmanship or treaty could have bound.

"Donner und Blitzen!" cried the major starting to his feet, "there is no cement like good blood shed in a great cause. My good friend, I drink to the true birth of the British Empire; and one word more, in case of accidents have your fleet ready."

[The above reads much like a condensation of some passages in Lord Rosebery's speech of the 23rd inst. Major von Blutwitz's observations were, however, in print before the report of his lordship's speech appeared.—ED. A. AND N. G.]

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

Saturday, Jan. 20.

The news from Natal when we went to press last week was to the effect that the important movement by Sir Redvers Buller and Sir Charles Warren to the north-westward of Ladysmith was being steadily prosecuted, and that the advancing forces had encountered no check. Early on the morning of the 18th inst. the naval guns and howitzers began a bombardment of the Boer positions. The Boer lines were found to extend about six miles in a westerly direction along a line of kopjes opposite Potgieter's Drift, considerably lower than the British position on Mount Alice, where the naval guns were placed. To the westward the enemy held Spion Kop, the highest hill in the neighbourhood, with emplacements and entrenchments extending for some miles. During the afternoon our troops advanced in extended order towards the enemy's position under cover of a heavy howitzer fire, but failed to elicit any reply, though their trenches were reported from balloon observation to be packed with men.

A telegram from Gen. Buller received at the War Office yesterday stated that Gen. Warren had reported a forward movement of importance by Lord Dundonald, who with the mounted infantry had come into action on the afternoon of the 17th inst. with a force of Boers to the west of Acton Homes. Gen. Warren reinforced him in the evening with a detachment of the Royal Dragoons, and he occupied the kopjes after a fight and held the position. The Boers lost a field-cornet and 20 killed and wounded, and 15 prisoners. The British loss was two killed and two wounded. Gen. Warren continued his westward movement yesterday, the infantry having started at five o'clock in the morning.

The name of the field-cornet of the Heilbron commando who was killed in action with Lord Dundonald's mounted troops, said to be Mentz. He was acting in place of Field-Cornet Ell, who is too old to take the field. The British and Boer forces were both making towards the same kopje, which was reached first and occupied by the Natal Carabiniers. The Boers, who numbered about 220, came on, not knowing that the hill was already taken. The number of prisoners taken 23, in addition to killed and wounded. Lord Dundonald has expressed his appreciation of the excellent work done by the local troops, who displayed remarkable dash and gallantry.

Lord Dundonald's cavalry brigade was in action on the 20th at Acton Homes. The South African Horse, under the command of Major Childe, took two kopjes. The first was a very steep hill, and Pte. Tobin, it is said, in the race for the top, got there 10 minutes before the rest, waving his hat and drawing on himself a heavy fire. Lieut. Newman was first up the second hill, which was not held very strongly by the enemy. By this time Lord Dundonald had reinforced the South African Horse. As soon as the Boers commenced shelling Major Childe was killed and four men wounded. Major Childe is said to have had a peculiarly strong presentiment that he was going to be killed, and had asked his brother officers before the engagement to put the following words over his grave: "Is it well with the child? It is well." This has already been done. Lord Dundonald read the funeral service. Lord Dundonald says that the honours of the engagement at Acton Homes lie with the South African Light Horse, the Natal Carabiniers, and the mounted infantry of the King's Royal Rifles. "Their gallantry was beyond praise."

Lord Roberts reported from Cape Town during the evening that Lieut.-Gen. French had yesterday still further extended his line to the eastward, threatening the enemy's line of communication, and had made a demonstration of cavalry and guns towards Heilbron.

The second contingent of 800 City of London Imperial Volunteers left Southampton for the Cape, the Lord Mayor and sheriffs visiting Southampton to see them off. The men left in the Ariosto, Gaul, and Kinfauns Castle.

The Duke of Cambridge accepted the honorary colonelcy of the special corps of Imperial Yeomanry, composed of gentlemen who pay their own expenses. The corps to be named the Duke of Cambridge's Own.

Figures published—said to have been most carefully compiled and verified, rather under than over estimated—giving details of Boer losses to date in killed and wounded:—

Mafeking	-	500	Against Gen. Gatacre	100
Belmont	-	400	Glencoe	300
Graspan	-	250	Elands Laagte	600
Modder River	-	400	Ladysmith	2,000
Magersfontein	-	700	Sundry	400
Kuuman	-	100
Douglas	-	75	Total	6,425
Against Gen. French	-	300

Over 1,000 men said to have joined the Pioneer Corps at Cape Town.

Lieut.-Col. Bethune's corps completed. The corps is recruited entirely from Uitlanders, and was formed and equipped in Durban. The regiment boasts its full strength, and before going to the front spent a hard week under canvas at Pinetown, a village 12 miles from Durban. The list of the officers is:—

Officer commanding, Lieut.-Col. Bethune, 16th Lancers; Capt. and Adj. J. H. A. Annesley, 18th Hussars; Qr. and Capt. A. V. J. Lockie; Paymr., Capt. Maynard. A Company: Capt. H. A. Warren; Lieuts. Carr Wallace, M. Lanham, Parker, and Osborne. B Company: Capt. A. B. Hay; Lieuts. C. J. Collopy, F. Rowland, W. K. McBride. C Company: Capt. G. A. H. Dickson; Lieuts. G. R. Shine and W. Rapley. D Company: Capt. Minshull Ford; Lieuts. Boddam, A. Cadell, A. Slatter, and G. Webster. Regimental Sergt.-Major T. Freeman.

News received, to the great regret of all who knew him, of the death of Mr. G. W. Steevens, the war correspondent of the Daily Mail, of enteric fever, at Ladysmith on the 15th inst.

Telegram from Montreal, despatched last night:—

"At to-day's session of Parliament a stirring exhibition of loyalty to Great Britain was given by the Lower House. On a motion to offer more troops for service in South Africa speeches were made overflowing with patriotic sentiments, and on several occasions the House cheered itself hoarse in response to specially telling utterances. After some little discussion it was finally decided to offer to bring up the total Canadian contingent to 12,000 men. A resolution was also adopted affirming the entire loyalty of Canada to the mother country."

Telegram from Sydney, despatched last night:—

"The Premier received the following cable: 'Her Majesty's Government learn with great satisfaction of the despatch of the contingent and the patriotic feeling in New South Wales. The Queen commands me to express her thanks for these renewed expressions of loyalty.—CHAMBERLAIN.' The members of the Government, accompanied by Major-Gen. French, finally inspected the transport Surrey this afternoon. The utmost enthusiasm prevails and all the colonies are ready to put forward any efforts which may be necessary to assist the mother country in bringing the war to a successful conclusion."

Sunday, Jan. 21.

A despatch reached the War Office shortly after midnight from Sir Redvers Buller. It was despatched at 9.45 last night. In this Gen. Buller stated that Gen. Clery, with a portion of Sir Charles Warren's command, had been in action from six a.m. to seven p.m. He had driven the enemy before him over a distance of three miles and bivouacked on the ground thus gained, but the enemy's main position was still before him.

A second message was sent off at 6.45 a.m. In this Gen. Buller said that in order to relieve the pressure on Sir Charles Warren he had sent Major-Gen. Lyttelton to make a reconnaissance in force in front of Potgieter's Drift. The effect was to retain the enemy in their trenches throughout the day.

A third message was sent off at nine p.m., in which Gen. Buller said that Gen. Warren had been engaged all day chiefly on his left, which he had swung forward about a couple of miles. The ground was said to be difficult, and the fighting was continuously uphill, but the general believed the troops were making satisfactory progress.

Telegram received at the War Office from Sir R. Buller, dated Spearman's Camp, Jan. 21, 10 a.m. Following wounded in action near Venter's Spruit on Saturday, Jan. 20:—

OFFICERS.

Staff.—Col. B. Hamilton, thigh, slight; Major C. McGrigor, leg, slight.

2nd Lancashire Fusiliers.—Capt. R. B. Blunt, leg, very slight; 2nd Lieut. M. G. Crofton, groin, severe; 2nd Lieut. E. J. M. Barrett, neck, slight.

1st Border Regt.—Capt. C. D. Vaughan, face and chest, severe; 2nd Lieut. Muriel, heel, slightly.

1st York and Lancaster Regt.—2nd Lieut. A. H. Kearsey, chest, severe.

2nd Gordon Highlanders.—2nd Lieut. P. D. Stewart head severe.

2nd Royal Dublin Fusiliers.—Capt. C. A. Hensley, since dead; Major F. English, thigh, slight.

Non-commissioned officers and men, 279.

A small column from Orange River moved out to Rooipan to co-operate with a demonstration from Modder River, but there were no results worth mentioning.

General order issued to the forces, Cape Colony:—

"The Commander-in-Chief wishes to impress on all officers who may at any time be in charge of columns or detached commands the grave importance of doing all in their power by good and conciliatory treatment to secure compensation for the people of the country in all matters affecting either their own interests or those of the troops. In all cases in which supplies of any kind are required they must be paid for on delivery and a receipt taken. Officers will be held responsible that soldiers are never allowed to enter private houses or to molest the inhabitants on any pretext whatsoever, and that every precaution be taken to suppress looting or petty robbery by any persons connected with the Army. When supplies are absolutely necessary for the subsistence of the Army, and the inhabitants are unwilling to meet demands, commanding officers may, after careful personal investigation, and having satisfied themselves that such supplies are necessary and available, order them in such case to be taken by force and a full receipt given.—KITCHENER OF KHARTOUM."

"In acknowledgment of the splendid work done in the present campaign by the colonials," says a telegram from Cape Town, "Lord Roberts has decided to pay them the high compliment of selecting them to form his body guard. All ranks here admit that the compliment has been honourably earned."

Monday, January 22.

From Modder River intelligence was despatched in the evening that the situation was unchanged. The effect of reconnaissances on the part of Lord Methuen's cavalry is "to keep the enemy constantly on the alert, and cause them to have a large number of men always in readiness to defend at any point a long line of entrenchments." A complete reorganisation of transport and supply arrangements is being effected. All remained quiet with Gen. Gatacre. Commandant Olivier, as the result of Mr. Winston Churchill's action, announced that he will detain in future all war correspondents who may be captured, and not entertain on any pretext applications for their release.

The Daily Chronicle published a telegram from its correspondent at Mafeking, dated the 10th inst., which gave an encouraging account of the situation. Erasmus, one of the Free State commanders, had gone away and taken his friends with him, sick and tired of the whole business. There were fewer Boers round the town, and those who were there seemed to be half-hearted. All was well, but much disappointment had been occasioned by news of Modder River disaster, the last news which had come to hand. The health of the garrison was fairly good and its spirits excellent. There were food supplies for three months.

Gen. French's patrols reconnoitred the country to the east and north of Bastard's Nek and found it clear of the enemy. The Boers were, however, more numerous to the north of Rhenoster Farm.

Lord Methuen made a reconnaissance with cavalry, infantry, and howitzers towards the Boer position at Magersfontein. The enemy's guns devoted their attention to the forces manœuvring on the plain, and did not reply to our naval guns. Our infantry retired at dark, but our guns during the night and in the early morning of Tuesday fired a number of shells against the Boer position, blowing up a magazine.

The appointments to the staff of the 8th Division published.

Officially announced that each battalion of the Imperial Yeomanry is to consist of four companies, each company being of a strength of 121 of all ranks. The companies are grouped into 13 battalions:—

(1) Col. Chaloner.—Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry (2); Glamorganshire detachment; Royal Gloucestershire Hussars.

(2) Col. Burke.—Lancashire Hussars; Cheshire Yeomanry (2); Warwickshire Yeomanry.

(3) Col. Younghusband.—Yorkshire Hussars; Yorkshire Dragoons; South Nottinghamshire Yeomanry; Nottinghamshire Yeomanry (Sherwood Rangers).

(4) Col. Blair.—Leicestershire Yeomanry; Derbyshire Yeomanry; Staffordshire Yeomanry; Bedfordshire Detachment.

(5) Col. Meyrick.—Northumberland Hussars (2); Shropshire Yeomanry; Worcestershire Hussars.

(6) Col. Burn.—Ayrshire Yeomanry; Lanarkshire Yeomanry; Lothians and Berwickshire Yeomanry; Fifeshire Light Horse.

(7) Col. Helyar.—Royal 1st Devon Yeomanry; Royal North Devon Hussars; North Somerset Yeomanry; West Somerset Yeomanry; Dorset Yeomanry.

(8) Col. Crawley.—Duke of Lancaster's Own; Mr. Paget's corps (2); Westmoreland and Cumberland Yeomanry.

(9) —.—Denbighshire Hussars; Pembroke Yeomanry; Montgomeryshire Yeomanry.

(10) Col. Lord Chesham.—Royal Bucks Hussars; Berks Yeomanry; Queen's Own Oxford Hussars.

(11) Col. Mitford.—Middlesex Yeomanry (Duke of Cambridge's Hussars) (2); West Kent Yeomanry; Royal East Kent Yeomanry.

(12) Col. Wilson.—Herts Yeomanry; Loyal Suffolk Hussars; Hampshire Carabiniers.

(13) —.—Irish (Belfast) companies; Irish (Dublin) companies; Lord Donoughmore's corps.

The War Office issued an order for the assembly of Lord Lovat's corps of Highland gillies, numbering 250 officers and men.

Tuesday, Jan. 23.

Kimberley was heavily bombarded to day from Kampsersdam, Alexanderfontein, Wimbledon Ridge, and Olifantsfontein, the first-named place being north of the town, the second and third south, and the fourth east. On our side fire was opened by a new fort, constructed on a refuse heap at Wessleton to the south-east of Kimberley. The shells of the enemy seem to have done no harm, most of them falling on the grounds on which the blue diamond clay is spread to dry. Reuter's correspondent heliographed:—

"The total white population of the town is 14,000. Owing to the wisdom and forethought of the military authorities in regulating supplies and not allowing any storekeeper to take advantage of the siege, the community is enabled to live at normal prices so far as the absolute necessities of life are concerned, although naturally eggs, fowls, vegetables, and fruit are at famine prices. All are in good spirits."

A correspondent writing from Ladysmith of the fighting there on the 6th inst. said:—

"The Imperial Light Horse deserve special mention for the splendid pluck they showed throughout the day's fight. They had to cut their way through the enemy to get into position on Caesar's Hill, and while engaged in driving one lot of Boers back another party of about 500 put in an appearance in the rear of our guns. The Imperial Light Horse here made a charge which will long hold a place in British military annals. They fought the enemy almost hand to hand, and were still engaged in their plucky attempt to clear the hill of the enemy when reinforcements came to their assistance. Sir George White does not know how highly to speak of the conduct of both these and the Natal Carabiniers."

Wednesday, Jan. 24.

A telegram despatched from Spearman's Camp at 6.20 last evening was issued at the War Office early this morning. In this Sir Redvers Buller said that Sir Charles Warren held his position. The British forces were shelling the enemy's position, Spion Kop, with howitzers and field artillery, the Boers replying with Creusot and other guns. In this duel the advantage rested with the British. An attempt was to be made on Tuesday night to seize Spion Kop.

Announced that down to last night the Mansion House Fund for widows and orphans amounted to £622,000, of which £59,000 had been remitted as the result of the collections on "Queen's" Sunday. The Lord Mayor, having communicated to Her Majesty the amount of the collections so far, received yesterday this reply from Sir Arthur Bigge:—

"I am commanded by the Queen to express to you the gratification with which Her Majesty has learnt from your letter of yesterday of the large sum which has been so generously given in compliance with the Queen's letter."

The New York correspondent of the Manchester Guardian makes out that the two Republics are drifting into financial straits:—

"A prominent banker of this city, with important Amsterdam and Paris connections, assures me that his information is that the Boers are becoming hard up for money, and are absolutely unable to place a loan. The supplies they had on hand in the beginning of the war are, he understands, nearly exhausted. Besides buying material of war, they have had to expend enormous sums in paying the salaries of foreign officers in their employ, and the latter refuse to serve after their pay is stopped. According to my informant, banking houses having the closest relations with the Boer Republics are of opinion that all the English have to do after relieving Ladysmith and Kimberley is to maintain a rigid blockade of all the frontiers, and the Boer cause will collapse for lack of funds."

No change of any kind was reported in the situation in Cape Colony.

Thursday, Jan. 25.

A telegram from Gen. Buller was issued from the War Office during the morning to this effect:—

"Spearman's Camp, Jan. 25, 12.10 a.m.

"Warren's troops last night occupied Spion Kop, surprising the small garrison, who fled. It has been held by us all day, though we were heavily attacked, and especially by a very annoying shell fire. I fear that our casualties are considerable, and have to inform you with regret that Gen. Woodgate is dangerously wounded. Warren is of opinion that he has rendered the enemy's position untenable. The men are splendid."

The Times in its second edition published a telegram from its special correspondent at Pietermaritzburg, giving the contents of the field order issued on the eve of Gen. Buller's advance. The men of the relieving force were warned to be carefully on their guard as to the methods that would be employed by the enemy, including the treacherous use of the white flag, false bugle calls, &c., and were told that the only order our generals would give would be "Advance." The order concludes: "This war has been forced upon us, for the lowest and basest of motives, by an enemy who used every means—treachery, deceit, and conspiracy—to gain their ends. Let us bear ourselves as our cause deserves."

Princess Louise Marchioness of Lorne, Princess Henry of Battenberg, Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, and Prince Alexander of Battenberg, with whom were Miss Minnie Cochrane, Count Mensdorff, and Major Colborne visited the wounded at Netley Hospital. The royal party embarked in beautiful weather on board the royal yacht Alberta at Trinity Pier, East Cowes, and were received at Netley by the medical staff. Many wounded soldiers had just arrived, and the royal party made their visit much longer than had originally been intended in order to speak a few words to the brave fellows, who were visibly affected at the kind expressions of sympathy.

Mr. Brodrick, late Under Secretary of State for War, speaking at Newark, defended the Government from some of the charges made against them in connection with the war. He said that when the proper time arrived the Government would not shrink from the fullest investigation into its conduct. It had implicitly followed the guidance of military advice, and had in noway sought to hamper those in high military authority. It would be the duty of the Government and Parliament to see that our military organisation was made equal to the Empire's needs.

Friday, Jan. 26.

A telegram was posted at the War Office during the morning from Gen. Sir Redvers Buller (received at six a.m.):—

"Spearman's Camp, 12.5 p.m., Jan. 25.—Warren's garrison, I am sorry to say, I find this morning, had in the night abandoned Spion Kop."

Gen. French's recent movement eastward was evidently for the purpose of joining hands with Gen. Gatacre's force. A telegram from Sterkstroom, in the second edition of the Times, stated that a patrol under Capt. Flannigan, of Brabant's Horse, returned to camp on Wednesday from Steynberg, where a connection was effected with French's column.

The Boers are stated to be still pressing the siege of Ladysmith, and so far had shown no indications of weakening confidence. From Ladysmith we learn that the positions at Caesar's Camp and Wagon Hill have been strengthened, and the town is now considered impregnable.

Five companies of the Imperial Yeomanry, with a total strength of about 600, paraded at Albany-street Barracks during the morning for inspection by the Prince of Wales.

SERIOUS BLUNDER NOW BEING CORRECTED.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The fact that so little damage to the enemy has been done by the rifle fire of our troops in South Africa must have been a surprise to many people in this country. During the last two years on different occasions letters of mine have been published, in which I pointed out that the sighting of the Lee-Enfield and Lee-Enfield rifles was incorrect, but no notice was taken by the authorities. Now all at once it has been discovered that a very serious mistake has been made, and the Government factories at Enfield are working night and day, and Sundays as well, turning out new pattern sights with the V's, through which the aim is taken, cut so as to correct the error. With the rifles hitherto issued to our troops it was impossible to hit a target the width of a man's body at any distance between 200 and 800 yd., if aim was taken straight at the centre.

Some scientific individual connected with the War Office determined that as the bullet drifts slightly to the left of the point of aim at 1,000 yd., it was desirable to place the barley-corn of the foresight considerably to the left of the centre of the barrel. The result is that out of hundreds of thousands of magazine rifles made only a few are capable of hitting a man at any distance between 200 and 800 yd. The few rifles that do happen to shoot straight are generally found to have faulty wood foreparts, the warping of which has counteracted the faulty sighting of the barrel. To hit the head of a man at 300 yd. it is necessary with the Government rifle to aim about 15 in. to the left, and at 500 about 25 in. One would have thought that the Hythe School of Musketry would have long since discovered the error in the sighting. It, however, was left to the Yeomanry to bring the error under the notice of the War Office.

When testing the shooting of the Yeomanry it was found that their proficiency with the latest-pattern Lee-Enfield rifle was most unsatisfactory. It was noticed that the bulk of the hits were on the right-hand side of the target, and that misses were nearly all to the right. This fact was evidently noticed by someone who had the will and power to influence the military authorities in the matter, and already an order for 250,000 new sights has been placed at Enfield. Many of these sights have been finished, and last week nearly all the rifles in the hands of the troops in this country were fitted with them, and large consignments are to be sent to South Africa to replace those on the weapons our troops are now using out there.

I have no hesitation, as a rifle maker and expert shot, in saying that had our troops been armed with straight-shooting rifles the effectiveness of their rifle fire would have been fully three times as great. Surely someone at the War Office or School of Musketry should be severely censured for this gross carelessness, which can hardly be considered less than a crime against the country. W. J. JEFFERY.

Obituary.

NAVY.

Vice-Admiral W. H. Haswell.—Vice-Admiral William Henry Haswell died on the 18th inst. at Adamson-road, South Hampstead, at the age of 81. Entering the Service in 1830, he became Sub-Lieutenant in 1838 and served in the Talbot at the capture of St. Jean d'Acre in 1840, being slightly wounded and receiving the medal. Shortly after, as senior Sub-Lieutenant of the Dolphin, off Brazil, he was engaged in the suppression of the slave trade, and as Lieutenant, which rank he attained in August, 1845, of the Acorn was employed in the river Plate, Parana, and Uruguay, in Sir C. Hotham's expedition against Rosas in 1845-46. As Lieutenant and Acting-Commander of the Penelope, on the West Coast of Africa, he was again engaged in the suppression of the slave trade and the capture of slavers, being instrumental in the capture of no fewer than 13 slavers and the liberation of 1,300 slaves. In 1850 he was promoted to Commander. He was Commander of the Investigator in the expedition of Capt. (afterwards Sir Robert) M'Clure to the Arctic regions for nearly five years, from January, 1850, to October, 1854, being four years and two months frozen up in the ice, proceeding by Behring Straits and returning by Baffin's Bay, for which he had an Arctic medal. In 1857 he was in command of the Himalaya, sent out with troops to China, when, hearing on his arrival at Angier Point that there was a mutiny in India, he proceeded on his own responsibility to Calcutta with the troops, and landed them in time to save Lucknow. For this service he received the thanks of the Governor-General in Council twice, and afterwards those of the Lords of the Admiralty. In 1858 he was promoted to Captain, and in 1872 he retired, advancing afterwards on the retired list in 1876 to Rear-Admiral, and in 1881 to Vice-Admiral. He had enjoyed a flag-officer's Greenwich Hospital Pension since February, 1888.

Staff-Commander D. J. May.—Staff-Commander Daniel John May, retired, died at Havant on the 15th inst. aged 68. He became Master's Assistant in 1847; Master's Mate in 1854; Master in 1859; Staff-Commander 1868; retired 1877. As Master's Mate of the Crane took part in the Niger expedition, 1854-55, and carried out valuable surveys of the portions of that river visited by the expedition. Served in the Baltic expedition, 1855, in the Volage (medal). In 1856 in the Calcutta present at the taking of Bogue forts (China medal). In 1857-59 again employed in Niger River and walked across to Lagos to report loss of the Dayspring, and returned overland with supplies for his comrades. ARMY.

Gen. J. M. Perceval, C.B.—Gen. John Maxwell Perceval, C.B., Colonel of the Suffolk Regiment, died at Dillon House, Downpatrick, on Wednesday night, aged 85. Gen. Perceval joined the Army as Ensign in the 12th Regiment June 21, 1833; became Captain May 18, 1838; Major April 14, 1846; Lieutenant-Colonel April 2, 1850; Colonel Nov. 28, 1854; retired on half pay from the 12th Regiment Feb. 21, 1861; became Major-General Aug. 8, 1864; Lieutenant-General Feb. 14, 1873; and General Oct. 1, 1877. He was appointed Colonel of the 97th Regiment March 21, 1874, and transferred to the 12th Regiment Feb. 28, 1888.

Lieut.-Gen. W. H. Whitlock.—Lieut.-Gen. William Henry Whitlock, retired list, I.S.C., died at 36, Gloucester-place, Portman-square, on Tuesday, aged 66. He joined the Army Sept. 20, 1849; became Captain Oct. 31, 1859; Major Aug. 23, 1869; Lieutenant-Colonel Sept. 20, 1875; Colonel Sept. 20, 1880; Major-General Aug. 17, 1890; Lieutenant-General April 1, 1874. During the Mutiny he served in Bengal as A.D.C. to his father, Sir G. C. Whitlock, commanding the Saugor Field Division (medal).

Major-Gen. H.H. the Duke of Teck.—Major-Gen. H.H. the Duke of Teck, G.C.B., G.C.V.O., died at White Lodge, Richmond Park, on Sunday evening from pneumonia. The health of the Duke, who was 62 years of age, had been unsatisfactory for some time, and he had never been really well since the death of the Duchess of Teck. The Duke of Teck had been confined to White Lodge by illness for the last year. His condition latterly became so serious as to necessitate the constant attendance of a medical man, and Dr. Johnson had for some time past been living at White Lodge. At three o'clock the Duke was seized by a stroke of paralysis. Dr. Johnson at once summoned Dr. Wadd, of Richmond, and

Dr. Savage, a specialist, of London, was also called in. Medical skill was of no avail, however, and the Duke died quietly at 10 minutes past 11. Francis Paul Louis Alexander, Duke of Teck, was the son of Duke Alexander of Wurttemberg and the Countess Claudine Rhedey of Hungary, and was born in 1837, the year of Her Majesty's accession to the throne of England. In 1866 he married the Princess Mary Adelaide, cousin of the Queen. By this marriage there were four children: Princess May, married to the Duke of York; Prince Adolphus, a Captain in the 1st Life Guards, who married the Lady Margaret Grosvenor, daughter of the first Duke of Westminster; Prince Francis, a Captain in the Royal Dragoons; and Prince Alexander, a Lieutenant in the 7th Hussars. All three sons are now serving in South Africa. Before his marriage the late Duke served as a Major in the Austrian Army through the Austro-Italian campaign, 1859. He was attached to Lord Wolseley's staff in Egypt in 1882, and received the Egyptian medal and Khedive's star, and after that campaign was appointed Colonel (unattached) in the British Army, and subsequently Major-General. The late Duke took deep interest in the Volunteer movement, and was Honorary Colonel of the 24th Middlesex (Post Office) Rifles and the 1st City of London Artillery.

Major-Gen. J. S. H. Algar.—Major-Gen. James Sturgeon Hamilton Algar, Colonel, retired list, King's Royal Rifles, has died at Stameen, Drogheda, at the age of 62. He joined the Army May 10, 1855; became Lieutenant May 9, 1856; Captain May 17, 1864; Major March 19, 1872; Lieutenant-Colonel Oct. 9, 1880; Colonel Oct. 9, 1884; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General Oct. 9, 1885. He served with the 60th Rifles in the suppression of the mutiny in the Shahabad District, Bengal, in 1858 (medal); throughout the campaign of 1860 in China (medal with two clasps); and in the Boer War, 1881.

Major-Gen. A. H. Heath.—Major-Gen. Alfred Hales Heath, Colonel, retired list, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, died at Dover on Thursday, aged 74. He joined the Army Dec. 9, 1844; became Captain Aug. 27, 1858; Major July 5, 1872; Lieutenant-Colonel Aug. 1, 1872; Colonel Aug. 1, 1877; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General Dec. 9, 1878. He served in the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, including the battles of Sadoolapore, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat (medal with two clasps), and at the siege of Delhi in 1857 (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp).

Col. G. M. Payne.—Col. George Massey Payne, retired list, I.S.C., died at Oak Lodge, Regent's Park, on the 24th inst. He was a son of the late Capt. René Payne, Bombay Cavalry. He joined the Army Jan. 20, 1849; became Captain Feb. 18, 1861; Major Jan. 20, 1869; Lieutenant-Colonel Jan. 20, 1875; and Colonel Sept. 5, 1877.

Lieut.-Col. A. Boulger, V.C.—Lieut.-Col. Abraham Boulger, V.C., Quartermaster, retired list, late York and Lancaster Regiment, has just died in West Meath at the age of 64. Col. Boulger enlisted in the 84th Regiment in 1855, and two years later went to India, where, on the outbreak of the Sepoy rebellion, he joined Havelock's force, with which he served in its victorious march through the various disaffected villages. After taking part in many actions, Col. Boulger, then a Lance-corporal, formed one of the storming party which crossed the bridge at the first relief of Lucknow, where he shot a gunner just in the act of firing a 68pr. loaded with a miscellaneous charge of grape, canister, stones, and glass. A few days later he was the first man to force a passage through the masked battery, and subsequently was present with the grenadiers' company of 50 men at the storming of the gaol, from which 380 dead Sepoys were afterwards removed. He performed several other conspicuous acts of gallantry, and at the termination of the war received the Victoria Cross, the medal with clasp, and a year's service. In 1872 he was promoted Quartermaster, and in 1882 took part in the Egyptian campaign, including the battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp, bronze star and brevet of Major). He retired Nov. 19, 1887, with the rank of Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel.

Lieut.-Col. F. F. T. Hobbs.—Lieut.-Col. Frederick FitzWilliam Trench Hobbs, retired list, A.P.D., died at Olive Mount, the Scour, Carlisle, on the 20th inst., aged 63. He was a son of the late Capt. T. Hobbs, 93rd Highlanders, joined the Army as Ensign, Dec. 15, 1854, and obtaining his company in the 55th Regiment became Paymaster Dec. 9, 1864; Honorary Major Dec. 9, 1864; Staff-Paymaster Aug. 15, 1881; Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel Aug. 15, 1888; and was placed on the retired list Dec. 27, 1896.

Lieut.-Col. H. F. Mackay.—Lieut.-Col. Henry Fowler Mackay, retired, formerly of the Inniskilling Dragoons, has just died at Bath at the age of 97.

Col. Mackay, who came of an old Sussex family, joined the Inniskilling Dragoons as far back as 1826, and was promoted Captain in 1830. The following year he was appointed Paymaster while on half pay as Major in 1841; became Lieutenant-Colonel June 20, 1854; and retired by sale of his commission on appointment as Chief Constable of the eastern portion of Sussex, with headquarters at Lewes. In this position he remained for over 30 years, and removed to Bath about 15 years ago. He retained his faculties to the last, with the exception of deafness, and on Christmas Day, when Col. Gwyn, Chief of Police at Bath, was talking to him of the Boer War (Col. Gwyn having a son at Ladysmith), Col. Mackay recounted the excitement which he well remembered following on Wellington's victory at Waterloo. The deceased's wife died a few years ago.

Major C. B. Childe.—Major Charles Baldwin Childe, South African Light Horse, and formerly of the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), was killed in action at Potgieter's, Tugela River, on the 20th inst., aged 46. The eldest son of the late Mr. Childe-Pemberton, of Millichope Hall, Shropshire, he was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford, afterwards joining the Blues, with which he served in the Egyptian War, 1882, when he was present at the night charge at Kassassin and battle of Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and bronze star). He retired from the Blues 15 years ago, and discontinued the name of Pemberton on succeeding to the old family estate of Kinlet in Shropshire. He married in 1884 a daughter of Mr. Montgomery, of Gothenburg, Sweden. Major Childe was one of the first to volunteer for active service in the present war, and was given command of a squadron of the South African Light Horse.

Capt. A. D. Raitt.—Capt. Arthur Douglas Raitt, 2nd Batn. the Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regiment), has died of wounds received in action in the fighting near Ladysmith on Saturday last. He was 31 years of age, was gazetted to the Queen's as 2nd Lieutenant June 28, 1890; became Lieutenant Dec. 15, 1891; and was promoted Captain Sept. 13, 1898.

Capt. C. A. Hensley.—Capt. Charles Albert Hensley, 2nd Batn. Royal Dublin Fusiliers, died of wounds received in action near Venter's Spruit on Jan. 20. He joined the Army in September, 1885, and obtained his company in the Royal Dublin Fusiliers July 1, 1895. He was in his 35th year. The headquarters of the deceased officer's battalion are in Ladysmith, but a detachment to which he presumably belonged was sent down before the siege began to Colenso, subsequently withdrawing to Estcourt.

Capt. F. E. H. Allen.—Capt. Frederick Edwin Halstead Allen, R.F.A., died at Bangalore on the 19th inst. of heart disease, aged 32. He was eldest son of Mr. H. E. Allen, 7, Bickenhall-mansions, Gloucester-place, W. He joined the Royal Artillery July 24, 1886, and became Captain Sept. 1, 1897.

Capt. C. Ryall.—Capt. Charles Ryall, 2nd Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment, was killed in action on the 21st inst. whilst serving with Major-Gen. Hart's brigade in Natal. Born Jan. 2, 1869, he joined the West Yorkshire Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant May 3, 1890, became Lieutenant Feb. 10, 1892, and Captain Feb. 15, 1899.

Lieut. F. C. Fox.—Lieut. Francis Charles Fox, late of the Royal Artillery, was killed in action at Ladysmith on the 6th inst. while serving with the Border Mounted Rifles.

2nd Lieut. D. B. Gore-Booth.—2nd Lieut. Douglas Blomfield Gore-Booth, 2nd Batn. Dorsetshire Regiment, died of enteric fever at Mooi River on the 19th inst., aged 24. He was eldest son of Col. Gore-Booth.

The Pall-mall Deposit and Forwarding Company have received a telegram from their Natal agent, Mr. Cotts, of the firm of Messrs. Neven, Mitchell and Cotts, respecting the parcels of newspapers and magazines sent out for distribution amongst the troops for the front free of charge: "Chieveley Camp, Dec. 25.—Newspapers and magazines were distributed in camp by me on Christmas morning and much appreciated. Convey thanks to givers and send more."

CAVALRY.

1st Life Guards.—Capt. Keith Fraser has arrived home from the Cape in the Canada, invalided.

2nd Life Guards.—The Daily Mail correspondent with Lieut.-Gen. French's column tells of an act of heroism on the part of an officer of the regiment:—

"During the advance of Col. Porter's brigade on the 19th inst. a detachment of the Household Cavalry, which formed the advance guard under Capt. Ferguson, was ordered to reconnoitre the kopjes to the north-west of Kleinfontein. The party, which was commanded by Lieut. de Crespigny, had almost reached the top of the kopjes when it was met by a heavy fire from the Boers. Tpr. Kemp's horse bolted. Tpr. Jaeger was wounded, and his horse ran off. Lieut. de Crespigny, whose horse was twice hit, took that of Shoeing-Smith Coulson, and rode back to save Jaeger. The latter was too exhausted to mount, and the lieutenant bade him hold on to the stirrup leather. Meanwhile they were subjected to a heavy fire, and the horse was twice wounded. Lieut. de Crespigny then dismounted and took the other stirrup, both men thus continuing their retreat. Another trooper then came up and took Jaeger behind him on his horse, the lieutenant waiting until Coulson came up with his wounded charger. Lieut. de Crespigny's action is spoken of as one of the most distinguished bravery.

7th Dragoon Guards.—Major Mackeson, retired list, late 5th Dragoon Guards, has been selected to do duty with the regiment. He is a major of April 25, 1893.

1st (Royal) Dragoons.—Capt. H.S.H. Prince Francis of Teck, D.S.O., left Cape Town on the 18th inst. for the front. Capt. Balfour, late of the regiment, has been appointed Adjutant of the battalion of Imperial Yeomanry, under Col. Mitford, for service in South Africa. To-day is the birthday of the Emperor William, Colonel-in-Chief of the regiment. His Majesty received on Thursday a telegram from Spearman's Camp, Natal: "The Royal Dragoons send their respectful greetings on the anniversary of the birthday of their Colonel-in-Chief." To this the Kaiser replied: "The Colonel-in-Chief sends the Royal Dragoons his best thanks for their wishes.—WILLIAM, I.R."

11th Hussars.—Major Lord Edmund Talbot, M.P., has joined the staff of Lieut.-Gen. French as A.D.C.

Lieut. F. Goodson, 64th Field Battery, has left the Cape, invalided.

Royal Malta Artillery.—Farewell order by Col. Bernard, commanding:—

"The commanding officer cannot allow No. 7 Company to leave Malta for service in Egypt without one word of affectionate farewell. For the first time in the history of the regiment a portion of this local corps is proceeding for permanent duty out of Malta. The regiment is losing the services of able and smart officers, efficient non-commissioned officers, and a fine and strong set of men, well disciplined, and perfectly trustworthy. The commanding officer feels confident that wherever they may serve they will keep up the credit of the corps to which they belong. In his parting with them Lieut.-Col. Bernard takes leave of Major Balbi, Capt. Vella, Lieut. Savona, 2nd Lieut. Gatt, and Surg.-Capt. Mifsud, of the non-commissioned officers and gunners, assuring them that they carry with them his best wishes and those of all the members of the regiment, who will always be glad to hear of their welfare."

Rifle Brigade.—Capt. Darell, 3rd Batn., is about to retire. Lieut. M. G. Bell, 3rd Batn., has been selected for service with the Chinese Regiment at Wei-Hai-Wei.

Royal Army Medical Corps.—Major H. B. Mathias, D.S.O., who served at Atbara and Khartoum, has been selected to take charge of the Moseley Hospital. Lieut. W. H. S. Nickerson, who was taken prisoner at Stormberg, was released by Commandant Olivier on the 19th inst. Lieut. H. E. M. Douglas has arrived home from the Cape, invalided.

Army Pay Department.—Changes of stations, &c.: Chief Paymaster: Col. Johnson, Barbados to England. Staff-Paymasters: Lieut.-Cols. Churchill from Gosport, Irving from Jersey, Newbury from Belfast, and Major Dolly from Colchester to South Africa. Majors Bennett, Inverness to Barbados; Minchin, London to Belfast; and Sheehan, Malta to Woolwich. Paymasters: Major Stubbs, London to Ceylon; Winter, York to Glencorse; and Capt. Maclure, London to Jersey; Major Molyneux from Glencorse, Capt. Alexander from London, Scott from Hamilton, Hall from Devonport, Magee from Clonmel, Beadon from Aldershot, Hewlett from Colchester, Lean from Portsmouth, Prothero from Woolwich, and Harris from Cork to South Africa. The requirements of South Africa have entailed the employment of six more officers from the retired list: Lieut.-Cols. Henry, Inverness; Reid, London; Burge, Portsmouth; Kennedy, Colchester; Nagel, York; and Brockman, London.

Owing to the war in South Africa and the number of members both of the batteries and infantry of the Honourable Artillery Company proceeding to the front, the visit to the Ancient and Honourable Artillery Company of Massachusetts arranged for May next has, with much regret, been postponed.

FIRST-CLASS CERTIFICATES.—N.C.O.'s and men at home and abroad can be prepared by post for the half-yearly exams. Classes are now forming for March, 1900. Special attention is given to men who cannot attend an army school.—Randall J. Fox (ex-Army Schoolmaster), 368, Acton Lane, London, W.

Reviews.

UNWRITTEN LAWS AND IDEALS.

A very interesting book is that which Mr. E. H. Pitcairn has edited under this title (Smith, Elder and Co.). Deep down in human nature there lies an instinct which we are accustomed to recognise under the names of conscience, honour, and duty, an instinct which finds its expression in the active employments of life. The idea of Mr. Pitcairn was to induce eminent men to explain the unwritten laws and ideals of their own professions. They have not all taken the same view of the work he asked them to assume. Thus Sir Edward Malet, in a chapter upon ambassadors, chiefly concerns himself with social questions and external etiquette. Very different is Rear-Admiral Penrose Fitzgerald's chapter upon the Royal Navy. Although the Queen's Regulations are particularly voluminous, no profession in the world is more strongly ruled by inherited ideals than the British Navy, and it sometimes happens, as the admiral says, that a man is compelled to choose between the dead letter of the law and the living spirit of some action great or small. The ruling idea is a very lofty one, no other than to give force and practical effect to the saying that Britannia is mistress of the seas; and the whole body of the unwritten law is bound up with the conception of duty. Thus there is an unexpressed code which makes it impossible for a man to abandon a comrade in danger, and stoker Lynch, of the Thrasher, obeyed it unflinchingly. The instinct comes down from the days of masts and yards, and we cannot but agree with the admiral that if some of the principles can be infused, as we are sure they are being, into the fibre of the steam navy all will be well with the Empire. The illustrations which the admiral gives are peculiarly interesting, but it would take too long to extract them in this place. Gen. Maurice has a chapter upon the British Army which is more discursive, but substantially covering the same ground, for, in truth, the idea is the same, though it may find a different expression. The general greatly insists upon the satisfaction in work that has been done together, as opposed to individual distinction, and the wish for union against disintegrating jealousy. "The man is nothing; the Service is all in all. The Service is the preservation of national life, the fulfilment of national duty, the safeguarding of national honour." Gen. Maurice believes that the day has gone by in which soldiers might say with pride, "I go where I am ordered; I never volunteer." Incidentally allusion is made, though in a veiled fashion, to the abandonment of the Prince Imperial and to the Jameson raid, the contention being that the military instinct was right in regard to those matters, while the public view was wrong. In short, Gen. Maurice has not a very high opinion of "what they say in England." An admirable chapter by Lieut.-Gen. McLeod Innes is devoted to the Royal Engineers, in which the main theme is the manner in which the abolition of purchase led to the employment of Royal Engineers in commands and staff duties to an extent never before known. The engineer is thought of too little by people at home, who recognise neither his services nor the dangers he runs. Gen. Innes has proper pride in alluding to the services of Chard at Rorke's Drift, of Warren in Bechuanaland, of Gordon in the Soudan, of Napier, Prendergast, and Kitchener, to name no others. As will be seen, he is dealing rather with the increasing duties of his branch of the Service than with those instincts which preoccupy Admiral Fitzgerald. In a delightful chapter on the Royal Artillery Major-Gen. O'Callaghan concerns himself chiefly with discipline and with the manner in which the individual is lost in the honour and duty of his corps.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Debrett's Peerage, Baronage, Knightage, and Companionage (Dean) has appeared for the year 1900, and we can only give it the very warm welcome which we have always accorded to it. In manner it is, as all the world knows, exhaustive, and the information it contains is in one sense authoritative. No event in the higher circles escapes the ken of "Debrett," which now proudly boasts that it has lived under the index numbers of three centuries. There is a marvellous contrast between the old "Debrett," which was thumbed by Nelson and Wellington, and that which we have upon our table. The latter is a very imposing volume, which few who live in society, or are concerned with its interests, can dispense with. But it is quite unnecessary to do more than draw attention to the reappearance of "Debrett."

The Royal Navy List Diary (Witherby) is a young publication, but has already proved its value. As a diary it is all that the naval officer can desire, and the amount of useful information it contains specially applicable to his requirements is extraordinary. Nothing is wanting to the completeness of the issue, and we very heartily commend it to the attention of officers.

Hazell's Annual has changed nothing in its character, but has added to its merits. It is every man's encyclopædia upon current questions, and there is scarcely any subject of immediate interest that is not treated with competence and generally with fulness. The events of the year at home and abroad are particularly well dealt with, and the naval and military sections, both home and foreign, are given great importance. Many new maps are inserted, home affairs are brought well up to date, there are many fresh biographies, and the war is treated up to Dec. 5. There are few people who can dispense with Hazell's Annual.

The Englishwoman's Year Book and Directory (A. and C. Black) appears for the second time in its new form, edited by Emily Janes. Whatever women are concerned in or interested in has a place in its pages, and nothing seems to be wanting in its various sections, which are devoted to education, employments and professions, industrial work, medicine, science, literature, art, music, sports, pastimes, amusements, philanthropy, and kindred interests.

The Live Stock Journal Almanack needs no commendation to those who know its merits, and we shall excuse ourselves from saying anything about it, except that its articles are as good and varied as ever, and that Mr. Stein writes upon the cavalry officer's troubles, Sir Walter Gilbey upon polo ponies, and Dr. Fleming upon fractures in horses' limbs.

BOVRIL AFTER THE BATTLE.

EXTRACT FROM

Sir Wm. MacCormac's Report to the "Lancet," after the Battle of Tugela.

" We walked to the field hospitals of the 4th, 5th, and 6th Brigades, situated about three miles from Chieveley under the crest of a hillock, about 400 yards outside the fire zone. . . . Awaiting their turn the wounded were lying outside in rows which were being continually augmented by the civilian bearers coming in from the field.

"As each wounded man reached the hospital he was served with a hot cup of bovril, large cans of which were boiling outside the tents."

The above Report will be found in full in the "Lancet" of 20th instant, and in most of the London Daily Papers of the 19th inst.

ARMoured CRUISERS.

AN interesting leader in the Times recently, dealing with the "Cruiser Strength of the Powers," does not entirely convince us that the Admiralty are building enough armoured cruisers to ensure the superiority of the British Navy in this important though costly type of warship. Our very large preponderance of modern protected cruisers cannot legitimately be reckoned as a set-off against the armoured cruisers of rival Powers, and there is a tendency towards this reasoning in the Times article. It will be of interest to summarise the main facts as dealt with by the leading journal. The last parliamentary return gives our Navy seventeen armoured cruisers, the most modern of which is the Aurora, built thirteen years ago. The Times admits that most of these vessels are inferior to the more recently built armoured cruisers of France, Russia, and Germany, especially in armament. France has completed five and Russia two cruisers since 1890, whilst in these years we have, rightly or wrongly, ceased to lay down any ships of the type. By any reasonable process of classification the British Navy is, as the Times states, "distinctly outranged and outclassed" in the matter of armoured cruisers built and ready for service. That is admittedly the position, and we can find little consolation in the fact that the Admiralty have knowingly permitted France and Russia combined to outbuild us in this type. True we are now building fourteen of these ships with an aggregate displacement of 167,600 tons, but this programme will not suffice to restore the relative standard. Ship for ship, England will still have one less of the type according to the present programmes of the three Powers.

So far there is no dispute as to the facts, but there is a willingness to believe that our former policy of building only protected cruisers was justified by the deliberate and well-weighed judgment of the Admiralty. We may assume, says the Times, "that these protected cruisers were fully capable of meeting on equal terms the contemporary armoured cruisers of other Powers." By this method of comparison a large number of deck-protected cruisers can be thrown into the scale to counterbalance a foreign superiority in armoured cruisers which is otherwise entirely obvious. Such an argument must be quite unconvincing to naval officers, who are agreed that foreign armoured cruisers of the past decade are distinctly superior in fighting power to our first-class cruisers. Hence there is no escape from the plain conclusion that our policy in ceasing to build armoured cruisers between 1887 and 1898 was, to say the least, a mistaken one, which is now admitted officially by our change of attitude. Fortunately there is still time to recover the lost ground. We should complete the cruisers of the Monmouth type with all possible rapidity and take care to outbuild France and Russia in the future.

There is, in our view, no doubt that if France and Russia were at war with England to-day the armoured cruisers of these allies might be able to inflict serious injury to our commerce notwithstanding our great preponderance of modern protected cruisers. The seventeen ships of the armoured type which we should have to rely upon to engage the eighteen of the allies are, for the most part, inferior in speed, guns, and protection. We could not in the early stages of such a war—if, indeed, at any period—spare battleships to drive these hornets from the trade routes. All we could do would be to attack the armoured cruisers of the allies with superior numerical force. The position is serious enough to justify increased effort in the completion of the fourteen armoured cruisers now building, though we have no desire to exaggerate the position nor to represent the disadvantage as a cause for alarm. We are quite able to recover the lost ground should the peace of Europe last two or three years longer.

OUR NAVAL STRENGTH.

PEOPLE appear to regard what Lord Rosebery calls one of the principal assets of the British nation with opinions which differ as widely as the types of ships of which it is composed. M. Lockroy, for example, tells the French people through the medium of the Figaro that our Navy is twice the strength of theirs, while, on the other hand, there are pessimists who write to the Morning Post painting a totally different picture. If we were to accept at its face value the recent manifesto of the Navy League we might feel very disturbed by the present condition of the fleet; yet, on the other hand, we have the conviction of a distinguished naval authority that it is ready to tackle the three principal continental navies, one down t'other come on. The truth is, of course, somewhere between these extremes, and while the Navy never was actually so powerful before as it is to-day, yet, looking at the work it might be called upon to do, it is not yet powerful enough. As Lord Charles Beresford pointed out the other day, the circumstance that the Navy is in its present effective strength is due to the definite and practical plan which was devised at the time that the Naval Defence Act was introduced. Then for the first time we began to work upon a system, and with a continuity of policy based upon the maxim that our fleet must be more powerful than the next two strongest navies combined. It is a question which must receive adequate consideration presently whether the standard thus set up does not now require emendation and amplification. There has been an upgrowth of new fleets and a development of old ones which have naturally resulted from the more general and widely diffused knowledge of the uses and value of sea power. If we now examine the relative strength of the navies of the Powers and compare this with the conditions which obtained when the Naval Defence Act was drawn, we at once see the significant character of the change which has taken place in the interval. But it is unnecessary to fly into a panic because foreign nations have not stood still nor refrained from benefiting from the lessons which Colomb, Mahan, and other writers have taught them. We have still one advantage if we care to and will avail ourselves of it. We can build more expeditiously and more economically than other Powers, and in this way we can regain the lead or make up leeway. The point is, are we going to do so? As we have already shown recently, there has not been during the past two years that continuous and sustained effort to push ahead with the ships under construction which, we contend, is essential to the maintenance of our sea supremacy. We appreciate the excuses which can be made for retardation of work, and recognise that delays in delivery of material and completion of ships are not entirely the fault of the authorities; but we wish we could see further indication of improvement in this direction, because we hold fast to the belief that much better value is obtained by expenditure upon new vessels than by attempting to rehabilitate the old ones.

Naval Notes.

It will be well if the public takes to heart the warning which Lord Charles Beresford gave the other day, when he foretold that when the Navy is called upon for war there will be a multitude of little shortcomings developed. These relatively little matters to which he referred are too often pushed aside by others of greater importance or apparent moment. Nevertheless, the effect of a number of small defects or shortcomings may in the aggregate be considerable. Lord Charles Beresford, as an illustration, mentioned that there were no tactical schools for the Navy, and that men went out to handle ships in a squadron who had never had it to do before, and had never learnt anything about it. The fact is, of course, that when our present captains and admirals were midshipmen and sub-lieutenants there were no such things as torpedo-boats and torpedo-boat destroyers. The instructional flotillas which we now have at the Channel ports, and which should be established on every foreign station, are the very best schools for learning tactics which can be imagined. If the performance of fleet evolutions is not a part of the programme of these instructional flotillas then the sooner it is made so the better. Playing naval war games whether with little blocks of metal or, as has been proposed, with one or more men representing each ship may have a value, but we doubt it. But handling destroyers and putting them through the movements laid down in the evolutionary signal book as if they were really battleships means sea training which is invaluable. The study of strategy is another thing altogether, and until we have another war to give actual experience to our naval commanders it must be learnt from books and maps. It is here, too, that the war game may well come into play, and without any very extensive or extravagant provision of material. With a few pins of varying value and a good-sized chart it is not difficult for any two men to decide which of them is the better strategist.

A valued correspondent writing on the subject of naval recruiting in Scotland last year says:

"It is matter for regret that from the returns before me it seems that so far as recruiting for the Navy and Royal Marines last year, Lieut.-Colonel Crooke and his energetic staff of assistants were not as successful as they ought to have been having regard to their praiseworthy zeal. Whatever cause may be responsible for the serious falling away in recruits for service under the Admiralty, Colonel Crooke and his staff cannot be charged with want of diligence and interest in their duty, for in Edinburgh at least the recruiting officer's agents are ever on the alert, and allow no probable candidate to slip. The time was, and not so very long since, when this district's returns stood next to London in point of numbers, but those for last year, it is feared, will not compare favourably with the poorest of the other home districts. The Royal Marine enlistments and naval ratings for 1899 numbered 293, as against 344 the preceding year, and from the appended details will be gathered the centres responsible for the deficiency. Edinburgh and Leith's contribution was 174, as against 232 in 1898, and the 174 was made up from the enrolment of seventy-one stokers, twenty-seven boys, thirteen artificers, and five youths, with Royal Marine enlistments to the number of fifty-eight. Aberdeen furnished in 1898 sixty-two candidates all told; last year the total enrolments only reached fifty-five, of which eighteen entered the Royal Marines, seventeen were rated as stokers, ten as boys, eight as youths, and two as artificers. Dundee, on the other hand, improved on 1898, but the increase is, though small, significantly encouraging to justify the hope that with careful nursing and increased assistance service in the Royal Navy will yet merit a better share of that large patronage which the manhood of that port have so unstintingly bestowed on the Army. Dundee's total enrolments were sixty-four, as against fifty in 1898; naval ratings accounted for twenty-two boys, nineteen stokers, ten artificers, and five youths; but Royal Marine enlistments only numbered eight. From the above centres only eighty-four marine recruits were obtained, results which when read alongside increases in the Army enlistments from these stations must be painfully irritating to the authorities at Headquarters. The naval ratings from Edinburgh and Leith, Aberdeen and Dundee, aggregated 107 stokers, fifty-nine boys, twenty-five artificers, and eighteen youths."

Admiral De Horsey, who has just received the Canadian medal, writes to point out that in his opinion the officers and men who served in the ships of the squadron under his command in the river St. Lawrence and on lakes Ontario, Erie, and Huron at the time of the Fenian raid of 1866 all appear to be entitled to this medal. He says: "Although nearly thirty-four years have elapsed, there must be many survivors of that squadron. From letters I have received there is reason to suppose that many persons failed to apply, and possibly are not even aware that they are entitled to the medal and clasp. The idea that the decoration is for the sister Service alone may well have got about, seeing that the newspapers, while mentioning Lord Wolseley, Sir Redvers Buller, and other military officers as recipients of the 1866 clasp have, so far as I am aware, never alluded to the Navy as being entitled to participation." The ships which were employed on this service were: Aurora, Captain De Horsey; Pylades, Captain Hood; Rosario, Commander Festing; and the hired and armoured gunboats Canada, Lieutenant Hooper; Royal, Lieutenant Vidal; Hercules, Lieutenant Douglas; St. Andrew, Lieutenant Smith; Michigan, Lieutenant Heron; and the Rescue, Lieutenant Fairlie. It is to be hoped that Admiral De Horsey's letter will be widely copied by the provincial press so as to give as much publicity as possible to his statements.

Her Majesty has graciously asked for and accepted a photograph of Mr. Cymbeline Alonso Edric Huddart, R.N., late of the Doris, the midshipman who was killed at Graspan. Mr. James Huddart has received a letter from Sir Arthur Bigge, in which he says: "Her Majesty read with feelings of admiration and pride the record by his commanding officer of the noble conduct of your son, Midshipman Huddart, whose heroic but untimely death the Queen deeply regrets."

Midshipman R. T. Down, of the Terrible, attached to the naval brigade with General Sir Redvers Buller, appears by a report from South Africa to have also shown that the youngster of the present day is in no way inferior to his predecessors in courage, dash, and ability while under fire. Mr. Down was in charge of a gun and its crew during recent operations at Colenso, and his coolness, as well as the precision of fire he maintained, were admirable. This young gentleman has only been seventeen months from the Britannia. Probably some of the croakers will again object to a mere boy being placed in front of the enemy. Unfortunately for their arguments the fighting qualities of the British midshipman are inherent, and nothing would hurt his feelings more than refusing to let him join the most perilous expedition. Such youngsters make the Nowell Salmons, Charley Beresfords, and others of our Navy, who cared neither for dog nor demon when they drew their swords in defence of their country. When that spirit dies out we may turn our guns into lamp-posts.

In another column of this issue we publish some of the letters we have received on the subject of the marine officers' grievances. With one of our correspondents we hoped that what we considered the unfortunate turn given to the discussion might terminate with the advent of the new year. As, however, our sense of justice has been appealed to, we have decided to allow the representatives of various phases of opinion to express their views. Sir John Colomb's further explanation will be read with interest, but it would have been additionally valuable could he have seen his way to entirely remove the impression created by his previous letters. An important issue is raised by "Fair Play" when he contends that a "seaman gunner" can be made in the barrack yard or drill shed. It is widely believed that however good a gunner may be made by such instruction, a seaman must receive his training at sea, and on second thoughts our correspondent will probably agree that there are good grounds for this belief. It is because they fear the results of a diminution in the time spent in sea training that so many persons have been alarmed at the change which has taken place in the composition of the Training Squadron. Whether "Chevron" represents a large section or not we do not pretend to determine; but his arguments do not commend themselves to our judgment. "P. M. P. T." places the discussion on a higher plane by his suggestion that a solution may be found in a reorganisation of the system of officering the marines. If we are not mistaken the suggestion has been made before, but the present time is perhaps well chosen for its consideration. We presume that our correspondent contemplates the idea of passing future officers of the marines through the Britannia, and permitting lieutenants as much choice in selecting the line they should follow as is now allowed to those who specialise in navigation, gunnery, &c. The trend of the discussion, it will be noticed, is away from its original text, which had special reference to the employment of marines in naval brigades. We are of opinion in this connection that much more might be said about the neutralisation of the excellence of the marines as infantry by tying them to guns and the unwisdom of using trained seamen gunners as infantry. We assume that in South Africa it was the naval guns which were wanted at the front, and naturally these were sent in charge of naval officers and seamen. Had the emergency demanded the services of infantrymen alone, the employment of seamen might have been most properly called in question.

The appointments of retired executive officers for transport duties at home indicate the necessity for reserving corresponding ranks of the active list for mobilising the fleet in the event of international complications. Although strongly advocated by Lord Charles Beresford and others interested in the defence of the Empire, affairs at present do not warrant such a measure, but readiness for that eventuality is imperative.

Admiral of the Fleet the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel is reported to be at Borneo. The gallant old veteran flag officer taught the pirates there a sharp lesson fifty-eight years ago, and now he is visiting his old battlefields. To undertake such a journey at the age of ninety-one is almost incredible.

Admiral Sir Anthony Hoskins was present on Saturday last at the embarkation of the City Volunteers at Southampton, whose departure was honoured by the attendance of the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London.

Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock, F.R.S., presided last week at the annual meeting of the Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution, of which H.R.H. the Duke of York is president. The gallant admiral, in referring to the services of the mercantile marine in transporting our troops to South Africa, was of opinion that it demonstrated very forcibly to what degree the nation relied on that particular service, a compliment which we are sure will be appreciated from such a distinguished officer.

Vice-Admiral Sir F. G. D. Bedford, Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian Station, left St. Lucia on Thursday last in the Crescent for Barbados.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford proceeds overland via Genoa for the Mediterranean, and probably reaches Malta on the 4th prox., when he will relieve Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel. His lordship has recently taken advantage of the Signal and Scientific Schools at Portsmouth to aid his knowledge of the important duties he is about to undertake. As Commodore of the Royal Temple Yacht Club he has not forgotten that he will be unable to attend the annual regatta in July next, and has therefore presented a cup for competition on that occasion.

Rear-Admiral Day H. Bosanquet, Commander-in-Chief of the East Indian Station, arrived in the Eclipse at Trincomalee on Monday last.

Rear-Admiral Burges Watson leaves for Malta on the 15th prox. to relieve Rear-Admiral Rodney Lloyd, Admiral-Superintendent, whose period of three years actually in command expires on the 20th idem.

Rear-Admiral the Hon. Thomas A. Brand, retired, speaking at Eastbourne last week, remarked that when an inquiry was made as to the preparedness of our Army for war, we must not forget to insist on an equally searching investigation of the condition of our Navy.

Captain M. P. O'Callaghan's appointment to the Britannia gives entire satisfaction, and will be of great advantage to the young gentlemen who serve under him. The excellent state in which he will find the cadets' training establishment will undoubtedly not suffer at his hands, and to improve it after such an able administrator as Captain the Hon. A. Curzon-Howe would be no easy task. At the same time Captain O'Callaghan has in the new college for cadets an undertaking that will require something more than ordinary tact and ability at its initiatory stage.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, of the Europa, managed to leave Portsmouth early on Friday in last week with a new crew for the Ramillies. As he had nothing but a skeleton crew to prepare his ship for the reception of those about to take passage, who did not all embark until late on the 15th, three clear days is not excessive for assigning them their duties and stations now requisite in the present system of naval transport, and which was unnecessary with regular troopships. Captain Pocklington, on returning from the Mediterranean, proceeds to Australia with relief crews.

Captain E. M. J. W. Slade, of the Algerine, recently promoted, returns to England after paying off that vessel at Hong Kong for recommissioning.

Captain H. C. A. Baynes, of the Latona, is due on Monday next at Portsmouth with the paid-off crew of the Indefatigable.

Commander F. A. Garforth, late of the Urgent, arrived from Jamaica on Friday last in the Royal Mail steamer Para, having completed his term of foreign service.

Commander Lord M. Elibank, retired, arrived on Friday in last week by the P. and O. steamer Peninsular from Hong Kong, on return from a voyage for the benefit of his health. More than forty years ago the noble lord was actively engaged at the Macao fort, Canton, and the Peiho forts, while serving in the old sailing frigate Cambrian.

Lieut.-Commander R. M. Harbord, of the Karrakatta, pays off that gunboat into the Sydney Reserve, and will be relieved when a new crew is sent out to commission the Boomerang in her place on the Australian Station.

Staff-Captain Henry Wood's appointment as navigating officer of the Glory differs considerably from that which he recently declined at Devonport, where better emoluments with house accommodation are items that have rarely if ever been overlooked by those who had the opportunity of securing them. As he did not appear to appreciate those advantages the Admiralty had no option in appointing an officer from the executive list, as there was no vacancy on the staff-captains' list to which a staff-commander could be promoted.

Inspector-General of Hospitals J. Martin's promotion to that rank fulfils the intention of the Admiralty to increase the established number of that grade, and should be followed by an appointment either to Chatham or Malta, especially the former, where the number of men at the general depot has been largely increasing for some time past.

Fleet-Paymaster G. E. Marcon has been granted retirement two years before the compulsory age. Although only promoted Paymaster in the ordinary course he was exceptionally fortunate in his appointments. He secured three as District Paymaster of Coastguard, besides several as secretary at home ports. His only sea service as an accountant officer was in the Ramillies, 1893-96, prior to his last home appointment.

Colonel H. St. G. Schomberg, R.M.L.I., promoted Commandant of the Chatham Division, left Plymouth headquarters on Monday last to take up that appointment. Everyone at the western division, although exceedingly glad to see him promoted, regretted his departure and would have been pleased had it been possible for him to have succeeded their present commandant, Colonel Scafe, whose promotion occurs on the 10th prox.

Lieut.-Colonel J. B. Leefe, Captain G. E. Barnes, and Captain E. R. Cottingham, R.M.A.; Lieut.-Colonels W. T. Adair (Chatham), T. J. P. Evans and G. T. Onslow, Majors H. C. Money and F. White, Captains A. R. H. Hutchinson (Instructor of Signalling), (Portsmouth); and H. M. Howard (Plymouth), R.M.L.I., embark immediately for special service in South Africa. It is an unusual incident for four substantive lieutenant-colonels of marines to be detailed for other than regimental duty at the same time.

Major and Brevet-Lieut.-Col. C. J. Cheetham, R.M.A., retired, Recruiting Staff Officer, 1st Class, at Birmingham, who will complete five years' service in that appointment in July next, has been granted an extension of two years.

Captain E. H. Orlebar, R.M.L.I. (Plymouth), has been appointed Adjutant 3rd V.B. Welsh Regiment, at Cardiff, in place of Captain H. B. Phillips, Welsh Regiment, whose period of service in the Auxiliary forces expires on Wednesday next.

Captain F. R. Boyle, R.M.L.I., has qualified for field officer's rank in subjects "a" and "b."

Lieutenant F. H. Cox, R.M.L.I., embarked in the Vivid for the Royal Naval Barracks, Devonport, on Saturday last in place of Lieutenant F. A. Nelson, R.M.L.I., and Lieutenant R. H. Darwall, R.M.L.I., in the Prince George in place of Lieutenant J. A. F. Cuffe, R.M.L.I.

MARINE OFFICERS' GRIEVANCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The writer of the article under the above heading on the 13th inst. explicitly states I "wrote of the midshipman who was killed at Graspan." Those who have not seen my letter will naturally conclude from what follows that I made observations personal to the gallant youth, to whose memory and conduct I observe Capt. Marchant, R.M.L.I., has officially paid a high tribute. I therefore request your insertion of this denial of the implication.

I regret the tone of the article in question tending to lower the broad question of efficiency of the naval service, which is the level on which I have always approached it, down to a personal squabble between two classes of officers of Her Majesty's fleet. The marine forces form an integral portion of the naval service, and what I strive for is that the naval service should reap to the full the advantages of special technical training imparted at the cost of the State to the officers of the marine branch of the Service.

I think the influenza must have got into your ink. In no other way can I account for the high temperature of the article and the feverish suggestion that I should ask bluejackets and marines by whom they would like to be "bossed." JOHN C. R. COLOMB.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Although in one article of your issue of the 13th inst. you hope that "a most unfortunate discussion may be buried with the advent of the new year," yet in your leading article entitled "Marine Officers' Grievances," you make statements which I think require an answer from the marine officer's point of view.

The first matter to which I take objection is your direct implication that the marine obtains his training at sea and from naval officers. The marine comes into the hands of the marine officer as a raw recruit, and by him and under him in barracks ashore is made into a highly-trained soldier and seaman gunner before he ever meets a naval officer at all. Undoubtedly the man improves in experience and general handiness after embarkation, but his progress and training there, as before, are carefully watched and guided by marine officers (non-commissioned officers included), and the training he receives from naval officers is mainly confined to the admonition of the 1st lieutenant or commander as to the way some portion of the paint work or brass work under his charge has been cleaned. Thanks are indeed due to those gunnery lieutenants who help marine officers in carrying out their work, but not to those who, with misplaced zeal, only irritate by uncalled-for interference. In short, I claim that the marine is made into what he is (and do not you say you are proud of him?) by this marine officer alone, valiantly assisted by the similarly trained non-commissioned ranks of the corps.

In your remarks on my first letter you asked doubtfully if many marine officers shared my opinions. By now I think you have received a conclusive answer to that, anyhow. I never met one who did not. You now in the same spirit hint that the rank and file of the marines may prefer to be led by naval officers. It is not usual to consult with the men as to what leaders they would prefer, and doubtless a particular private of marines could be found who held this view; but I do not think he would have a good service record.

As to the differences in age between the gallant officers who fell at Graspan, this also helps our case. The commander was far younger than the major of marines serving under him, and this difference in age between the youngest marine officer and the midshipman was a very material one. There have been post captains doing well in command of their own ships at 24 years of age, but I never heard of one at 19.

Finally, the marine officer would not "regard the seaward side of his profession as a drudgery and a nuisance to be shirked" if the Admiralty and the naval officer will therein offer him a career and a scope for his legitimate ambition. FAIR PLAY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your article on the marine officers' grievances which Sir John Colomb and Mr. Arnold-Forster hope to remedy, you say that they "are not shared by the rank and file of the marine corps." If this is true, then the rank and file will have a right to complain that they are once more being left in the cold by their officers. I should like to ask Sir John Colomb and Mr. Arnold-Forster why it is that they should not take the same interest in the rank and file as in the officers of the corps. You have pointed out, what is true, that the marine officer does not inspire the same feelings of esteem and respect in those under him which prevail in other branches of the country's Service. There are exceptions, but my experience has been mostly to the contrary. Of course, this may be due to the fact that afloat the marine feels that while he is quickly in his element, his officer is often like a fish out of water. I believe that this will continue to be the case so long as the best of our officers are allowed to occupy positions on land connected with the Army and thus to forget that they belong to the naval service. If they could take the rank and file of the corps with them, they would be content, but because they are not allowed to do so they are discontented, and their discontent is reflected in their relations to those under them.

CHEVRON.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—After reading your article upon the grievances of marine officers, it has occurred to me that the time may be ripe for the consideration of a scheme of reorganisation of the corps. The history of the marines shows that while there has been continuous development on the part of the private soldier in the direction necessitated by naval change, the marine officers have lagged behind, and have failed to assimilate themselves to the new conditions. Originally the marine corps may be said to have had two functions; the first was that of small-arm men on board ship, and the second that of naval police. Their proved loyalty was a check upon the promiscuous crowds of seamen and landsmen who formed the crews of our ships. The first step towards giving them new duties was the creation of the artillery branch. The idea appears to have been that until the time came for using their small arms, they might work the guns on the afterpart of the upper deck. But as time went on and sea battles occurred but seldom, it was assumed that the use of the marine as a small-arm man would be but infrequent, and gradually the infantry as well as the artillery have been made proficient in naval gunnery. To-day there is not a very great difference between the usefulness of the marine and a seaman as a gunner. The seaman is perhaps, to use a popular phrase, the more handy man, but the marine is the cheaper article.

On the other hand, while it is true that the marine officer has been forced to make himself acquainted with gunnery, and he can, and generally does, take charge of one or more guns on board ship, there is no other function of the naval officer which he can well fill. The naval officer, however, is by his modern training fully competent to carry out all the essential functions of the marine. It is true that he may often lack the experience in handling men on shore which falls to the lot of the marine officer who has the opportunity of seeing service with the land forces. Whether, however, the possession of this experience is a benefit or not is a question with which I do not propose to deal. There is much to be said on either side whether the reply be in the affirmative or otherwise.

And it is here that I desire to make my point. Why should we not officer our marines with seamen? There might be some small loss of soldierlike appearance in the marine as a consequence, but in no other way should he suffer, while such a reorganisation would put an end, once and for ever, to the complaints of which we now hear so much. Naturally such a change could not be carried out at once, and it is better that it should not be; but the same process might be gone through which is gradually disposing of the old navigating branch, and which has been an unmixed blessing to the Service.

In conclusion, I deplore, sir, as much as you can the introduction of matters which can have no other result than to create discord between naval and marine officers. I allude especially to the publication of the late Major Plumb's letter. I have a great respect for Sir John Colomb, to whom the corps owes a deep debt of gratitude, but I fear that in this instance he has inadvertently done harm.

Navy Foreign.

The Moniteur de la Flotte repeats the story circulated by the Patrie that the gunner who has been responsible for the shooting, more or less efficient, of "Long Tom" at Ladysmith, was a sergeant of the first French Artillery, who mysteriously disappeared from Lorient after having broken his leave. Detectives were set to work to discover him, but the trace was altogether lost until he wrote from Ladysmith to a friend to describe the work which occupied him, and he explained that he had been promoted a captain of Boer artillery because of his good gunnery. This particular "P." is said to be a married man, and to have served a long time in the French artillery, both of the Army and the Marine.

The Council of Ministers in Paris has been engaged in the discussion of the plans for national defence which had been presented at earlier meetings. These plans have been submitted for investigation to M. Caillaux, who is occupied in studying the question of ways and means. When he has reported upon them they will be brought together as a complete programme, and will be presented to the Chamber. It is expected that the outlay involved, beginning next year and extended over a period which we believe has not been announced, will amount to a total sum of 750,000,000f., or about £30,000,000. One part of the programme is a great scheme for the expansion of the fleet, largely inspired by the projects of the German Emperor, and absorbing about two-thirds of the total sum. Another part of the scheme will provide for the defence of the French coast by fortified works, including also Bizerta and Mers-el-Kebir, as also of the colonial ports and coasts. The whole scheme will be completed by the increase of building and other facilities at the dockyard.

The programme for the present year is still under discussion, and it does not appear that the report of M. de la Porte will contribute much to a settlement while a new plan is being evolved by the Council of Ministers. He is asking if the programme of 1896, which provided for the building of 220 various vessels, can be considered to be abandoned. He criticises the new battleships proposed on account of deficient speed and range of action. His committee, however, invites the Minister, considering the fact that the ships proposed could not be completed for five or six years, to present some other project. Neither is M. de la Porte content with the armoured cruiser of 12,416 tons known as C 11, which is included in the programme, on the ground that she would be inferior to the Jeanne d'Arc in engine-power, speed, and range. Meanwhile the Minister had proposed to substitute two other cruisers of the class for the battleships which were discredited, but the committee will only sanction C 11, and permit some slight preparation to be made for the beginning of another in order to find work for the dockyard at Cherbourg. Therefore, at the present time the French ship-building programme of 1900 is completely unsettled, and we shall be curious to see what course is ultimately adopted, and what is the nature of the greater programme which is to emanate from the Cabinet. It is all a matter of the wrangling of schools, and of definite policy there seems to be no evidence. As to M. de la Porte, his great idea is to secure defence for the coasts with a very limited range by means of torpedo-boats, submarine vessels, and perhaps of howitzer gunboats, while the guerre de course would be prosecuted vigorously.

COMMISSIONERS FOR THE PORT OF RANGOON.

NOTICE.—The Commissioners for the Port of Rangoon require the services of a Royal Naval Officer (on active service) of the rank of Lieutenant of eight years' seniority at least, or of an officer of the Royal Indian Marine of similar standing, to undertake the duties of Deputy Conservator of the Port.

A thorough practical knowledge of Hydrographical surveying is an absolutely indispensable requirement in the officer holding the appointment, as he will have personally to carry out periodical surveys of the Rangoon River and its approaches, with the help of a native assistant, to whom he will be expected to impart instruction in any part of the latter's duties in which he may find his training defective.

The principal duties of the officer appointed will, however, be the control of the pilots and harbour-masters, the buoying and marking of the river, the berthing of the shipping, &c., &c.; in other words, the Marine Executive control of the Port, under the Commissioners. In these duties he will have the help of the Assistant Conservator, a certificated and experienced master in the Mercantile Marine.

The salary of the appointment is Rs. 800 a month, rising in four years to Rs. 1,000 a month, by annual increments of Rs. 50 for approved service. This rate of pay is inclusive of house allowance and all other allowances except exchange compensation allowance. The officer appointed will be required to live as near the river as possible.

Applications, stating particulars of service, experience, and age, should be addressed to the undersigned so as to reach Rangoon on or before May 1, 1900.

A. B. GATHERER,
Chairman, Port Commissioners.
Rangoon, December 29, 1899.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING

BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN INSURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAYED TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

THE MILITARY SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

THE words of confidence in which the Speech from the Throne on the reassembling of Parliament exhorted the people of these realms to sustained and renewed exertions until the war in South Africa shall be brought to a victorious conclusion are being responded to with enthusiasm throughout the Empire. Regret and disappointment at the abandonment of Spion Kop and the retreat of Sir Charles Warren's division to the south of the Tugela were, it is true, deep and sincere; but this further check has served only to stiffen the country's fixed resolve to persevere with redoubled effort. The flank movement on the western drifts by way of Springfield had been ably planned and skilfully executed by Sir Redvers Buller. All thoughts were then instinctively turned to Ladysmith, and sanguine expectations were indulged in that, possibly only a few days more of duration remained for its gallant defenders. The successful passage of the drifts was the prelude to five successive days of almost incessant fighting. From January 20 to 23 Sir Charles Warren pressed constantly forward. His progress was slow, but it appeared to be sure. Kopje after kopje on the enemy's extreme right was seized. The southern crests of the great plateau of Taba-Myana held by the Boers were occupied, and a decisive victory appeared to be in sight, when on the night of Tuesday, January 23, Spion Kop, the key of the natural stronghold, was captured at the point of the bayonet by General Woodgate's brigade and part of General Lyttelton's. In successfully scaling the almost inaccessible sible heights of the mountain and possessing themselves of its summit our infantry had proved their daring. On the day following they were put to a still severer test, when from dawn to dark the Boers under cover of their guns pressed home successive assaults in their determined efforts to recover the lost position.

It would appear that the almost untenable character of the mountain was not known to our staff, for upon the summit—a veritable shell trap—there was found an area of some extent that was swept throughout from the crest of a hill still further to the east by the fire of quick-firing and other guns which our artillery were unable either to locate or to silence, so perfectly were they concealed. With a force of greatly increased strength and artillery available to assist the infantry the position might possibly have been held, but at a terrible sacrifice of life. As it was Colonel Thorneycroft, who succeeded to the command on the summit when General Woodgate fell severely wounded, decided that it was no longer tenable—a decision in which Sir Redvers Buller has since unreservedly concurred—and withdrew his troops during the night. Convinced, then, that the right of the Boer lines was too strong to be turned by his force, and that another attempt to take and hold Spion Kop would be useless, owing to the extent of the crest and the lack of water, coupled with the difficulty of getting up sufficiently powerful guns, Sir Redvers Buller determined to recall Sir Charles Warren's entire division. At six a.m. on the 25th ult. the withdrawal of the train began, and by eight a.m. on the 27th the force was concentrated south of the river, unmolested by the enemy and without loss of men or stores. Lord Dundonald's mounted brigade reached the south bank also on the latter date. General Lyttelton's brigade, according to unofficial information, has retained its original position on the northern bank beyond Potgieter's Drift.

The general situation in Natal has by this reverse been thrown back substantially to what it was before the turning movement began. It is worse in respect of the moral gain to the enemy, but the spirit of our troops has not been lowered and Ladysmith continues confident. If Sir Redvers Buller finds himself able to maintain his command of the western drifts by which he crossed the Tugela his move on the enemy's right flank will not have been entirely abortive. Already he contains a Boer force keeping watch on their extreme right, he has checked raiding to the south on the British left flank, and he has preserved the means of recrossing the Tugela. There are already camp rumours of another projected advance on his part. It is possible, however, that for a time Sir Redvers Buller's rôle may be to guard and patrol the line of the Tugela on its southern bank, harassing and attacking the enemy at unexpected points. Further additions to the Army in Natal, now some 40,000 strong, may be withheld, and the fresh troops landing almost daily in South Africa may be concentrated in Cape Colony for an early advance into the Free State in accordance with the original plan of campaign. As to Ladysmith, we shall continue to be hopeful. Strict economy of food and ammunition, increasing watchfulness and entrenchment against assault, and the keeping up of a stout heart, may enable that sorely-tried place to hold out yet until relief comes to it, that perhaps from an unexpected quarter.

From Modder River, beyond occasional firing from our naval guns and nightly sniping by the enemy, there is nothing to record, save the welcome arrival of the Queen's gifts to her soldiers and that of Major-General Hector MacDonald to assume command of the Highland Brigade. While the deadlock has been complete at Modder River, the bombardment of Kimberley was resumed for several days lately with ever-increasing intensity. The undaunted garrison, however, proved equal to the occasion, replying effectively to the enemy's siege artillery with a long-range 30pr. gun manufactured in the workshops of the De Beers Company within the invested place. A fresh centre of activity is reported to have been established at Richmond, twelve miles west of Belmont, whence a mobile column of Canadians and Australians has been operating against the rebels with success at Badenhorst on the river Riet. Prieska, some eighty miles west of Orange River Station, is also stated to have been occupied by the British. Reports have been current for some days of the relief of Mafeking from the north, but they still await confirmation. We have also heard through Boer sources of an action fought near Crocodile Pool between Colonel Plumer's force and the enemy, in which the latter claim a success. Crocodile Pool being about sixty miles north of Mafeking, an action fought there would encourage the belief that Colonel Plumer is still steadily forging south towards the accomplishment of his task. Along the Orange River there are also signs of increased activity. General French has made important reconnaissances to both east and north, and on the 25th ult. he located a strong Boer force in position at Rietfontein, nine miles north of Colesberg on the road to Botha's Drift, by which, as well as by Norval's Pont, the enemy still preserve their lines of retreat intact. General Gatacre, centred at Sterkstroom, holds all the passes in his neighbourhood, and has come into touch to the west with General Kelly-Kenny, who with the 6th Division has occupied Thebus, a station on the Rosmead-Stormberg line, a few miles west of Steynsburg. We hope to hear before long of concerted movements by Generals French, Kelly-Kenny, and Gatacre, having for their immediate object the expulsion of the enemy from the invaded districts of Cape Colony. Some such measure of success is now much needed, both as an evidence of progress and as the precursor of more important forward movements. The early despatch—at length authorised—of the 4th Cavalry Brigade will greatly increase the mobility of the forces in Cape Colony now collecting under the eye of Lord Roberts, and which, when they include the 6th, 7th, and 8th Divisions, with an adequate proportion of mounted men and artillery, will become a second powerful army corps.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN DESPATCHES.

AFTER our columns were closed last week we received the official despatches dealing with the events in South Africa from the opening of the campaign up to December 28. These despatches come from three distinct sources. The first is penned by Sir George White, the second by Lord Methuen, the third by Sir Redvers Buller. Unfortunately Lord Methuen's reports do not include the battle of Magersfontein. Enough information is given, however, to enable us to form a fairly accurate judgment as to the general situation for the two months with which the official documents deal. Taking Sir George White's account first, it is now rendered clear that the retention of Dundee was entirely due to the strong recommendation of Sir W. Hely-Hutchinson, the Governor of Natal. Sir George White objected, he tells us, on strategical grounds to the maintenance of this advanced post, but allowed himself to be overruled on account of the Governor's plea of political considerations. Sir George White assumed command of the troops in Natal on October 7. It was on October 10 that he had his interview with Sir W. Hely-Hutchinson and laid before him his views. On October 12 the Boers crossed the frontier both on the north and west and hoisted the Transvaal flag at Charlestown. It will be seen how little time General White had for any preparations. He was a stranger to the country, and unacquainted with Boer methods. In all the circumstances it will be allowed that he has done remarkably well, and fully justified the reputation he gained in India as an able administrator and brave soldier. Even if he had held his own against the Governor, and given orders for Sir Penn Symons's force at Glencoe to have fallen back on Ladysmith at once, it is doubtful whether as things turned out it would have helped matters. Indeed, from what we know now there is every reason to suppose that it would not. As it was, Sir Penn Symons was able to strike a blow, and that in itself had an effect in delaying the enemy's advance, whilst the incident of the withdrawal from Dundee brought credit on all concerned. Not even the most unfriendly of continental critics has been able to find fault with the manner in which this difficult military operation was carried out by Major-General Yule. The Boers were ready, but we were not. It is idle therefore to plead as some may do that if General White had been stronger the ultimate effect would have been different. Sympathy should be felt for a distinguished soldier who accepted a great responsibility and has proved himself well worthy of the confidence reposed in him.

Lord Methuen's despatches lose much of their value inasmuch as they tell of what happened at Belmont, Enslin, and Modder River only. The matter of first importance touched upon by Lord Methuen is that of the frontal attack. Describing his tactics at Belmont, he says: "There is far too great risk of failure in making flank and front attacks in the case of a position such as lay before me at Belmont; the very first element of success is to keep touch between brigades from the first. Nor is there any question of taking the enemy in flank, as on horses he changes front in fifteen minutes." We see from this how seriously our generals have been handicapped by having to depend entirely upon infantry. Lord Methuen deplores the want of cavalry. Writing of this action at Belmont, he observes: "A brigade of cavalry and a battery of horse artillery on my right would have made good my success." And he laments also the absence of common shell. "Shrapnel," he writes, "does not kill men in these kopjes; it only frightens." Referring to the battle of Enslin we find him saying: "For the second time I longed for a cavalry brigade and a horse artillery battery to enable me to reap the fruits of a hard-fought action." Presumably Lord Methuen would not express himself thus unless he felt he had been placed at a serious disadvantage. It is so easy for arm-chair critics sitting at home to argue that this or that ought to have been done by generals at the front. What can an unfortunate general do placed in the position in which Lord Methuen has been, brought face to face with a formidable, well-armed, and mobilised enemy, but having none of the materials necessary to follow up a victory gained after hours of fighting by gallant infantry and an admittedly efficient force of artillery, the latter firing only shrapnel shell, against men strongly entrenched? As a correspondent, whose letter we published the other day, said truly, "Lord Methuen might almost as well have had a number of fire engines as field guns using shrapnel in these actions, Belmont and Enslin."

The despatches before us are penned in that modest language which might have been expected from an officer of Lord Methuen's known character. They show beyond doubt that in the actions with which they deal the gallant general was quite prevented from securing real victories from want of three essentials—cavalry, horse artillery, and common shell. If these three requirements had been forthcoming, Magersfontein would, there is reason to suppose, never have been fought, the disaster to the Highland Brigade would not have had to be recorded, and Ladysmith might now have been relieved. We are ready to make all allowances for those in authority at home, but it is not in the interests either of the Army or the Empire that commanders at the front should be blamed for faults when they have been sent into the field to face a formidable enemy without being supplied with the means of obtaining victory. The truth is the British Army has been so accustomed to doing battle against savage enemies and underrating the more brilliant achievements of our troops before the era of small wars set in, that we have completely lost our heads, and seem to have supposed that we could carry all before us. We have, therefore, in the present campaign not even taken the trouble to observe ordinary precautions. If the war against the two republics only has the effect of putting an end to sickening bombast, and causes us to mend our ways, it will not have been entered upon in vain, disastrous as it has proved to our military prestige.

But there is the third despatch, that of Sir Redvers Buller, to be dealt with. It is to be regretted that General Buller's account is marked by a certain vagueness. He tells us that the operations began at four a.m. on December 15, when he moved off from Chieveley and Dornkop Spruit Camp with the object of trying to cross the Tugela at Bridle Drift first. If he got over his troops were to have moved down the river and helped the crossing of the main drift. If he did not succeed in effecting a passage the troops there were to have contained all the enemy on the western side, and to have covered the flank of the attack on the main drift by the bridge. The general's plans failed. Why they failed we all know too well. Unfortunately Colonel Long, who was in command of the guns, was dangerously wounded, and General Buller has been, as he says, unable to obtain his explanations. He nevertheless brings against Colonel Long a very serious charge. He states that he personally explained to him where he wished him to come into action and with the naval guns only, as the position was not within effective range for his field guns. "Instead of this Colonel Long advanced with his batteries so fast that he left both his infantry escort and his oxen-drawn guns behind and came into action under Fort Wylie, a commanding, trebly-entrenched hill, at a range of 1,200 yd., and I believe within 300 yd. of the enemy's rifle pits." As we have had no explanation yet from Colonel Long, it is only right that his recovery should be awaited before he is condemned.

Judging, however, by what has since happened, we are disposed to think that Colonel Long proved himself a friend indeed to Sir Redvers Buller. If General Buller has crossed the Tugela reinforced by Sir Charles Warren's division and been compelled to fall back on the south of the river after suffering serious losses, because the enemy's position was too strong to be assailed, what might not the consequences have been if he had succeeded in making his passage on December 15 with but half his present force? He might have succeeded in relieving Ladysmith, but we rather doubt it. Continental critics assert that he would have gone to destruction; but it has to be remembered that continental critics have all along regarded the operations of this campaign in anything but a friendly light, and we must not pay too much heed to what they say, though, unfortunately, their forebodings of evil have as yet been more than justified.

In forwarding Colonel Miles's report on the action at Zoutspans Drift on December 13, Sir Redvers Buller makes the remark, "I suppose our officers will learn the value of scouting in time, but in spite of all one can say, up to this our men seem to blunder into the middle of the enemy and suffer accordingly." This refers to a passage in Colonel Miles's report to the effect that "The party appears to have come upon the enemy somewhat suddenly, and from verbal accounts it appears that their attack was in the nature of a surprise. The attack was pushed on very rapidly, and unfortunately Captain Bradshaw was killed early in the action. . . . Captain Bradshaw was an energetic and valuable officer, and I deeply regret his loss." We quite agree with Sir Redvers Buller; the scouting has been lamentably bad in South Africa. This being so, it is difficult to explain the serious omission to which correspondents who know the Cape are continually directing our attention—the absence of Major-General Sir Frederick Carrington from the scene of action. Sir Frederick Carrington does thoroughly understand South African scouting and Boer methods. Yet not only is he not employed at the front, but it is doubtful whether his advice was called for when arrangements were made for the despatch of the field force. And yet the advice and co-operation of such a man, as we have since learnt to our cost, would have been invaluable. There is reason to suppose that it would have prevented the refusal of colonial mounted contingents at any rate, and this in itself would have been a distinct advantage, and perhaps rendered Sir Redvers Buller's complaint unnecessary.

Army Notes.

With the exception of Lord Rosebery's flash of eloquence the speeches in the House on Tuesday were disappointing to a degree. The Imperial Parliament had a great opportunity of proving that it is Imperial in more than name, and it failed to rise to the occasion. In the face of a grave Imperial crisis, who wants to hear Ministers and ex-Ministers score points against one another in a long-winded debate which scarcely rose beyond the level of mediocrity? What the nation wants is an outline of policy and unmistakable signs that the Government realises the gravity of the situation. Both Lord Salisbury's and Mr. Balfour's attitude was lowering to parliamentary prestige. That conscription is not likely to be adopted in this country at present is very true, but what about alternative proposals? In order to defend the Empire they have built up, every community which pays homage to the Queen is willing to undergo some form of compulsory service, and that it is necessary is clear from Lord Salisbury's own veiled reference to the Powers. At any moment we may have to transport troops in defence of our interests elsewhere than in South Africa. Where are they to be found? The Regular Army and nearly all our Reserves are engaged in fighting the Boers; hence the vital necessity of organising fresh forces, strong in every arm of the Service. However friendly European Governments may be towards us, we seem to be cordially hated by every European people, with, perhaps, the exception of the Italians and the Greeks. With a protracted war in South Africa there is no telling what may happen. A strong Navy and a strong Army are therefore absolutely necessary for the defence of our interests.

On Thursday evening Mr. George Wyndham did much to clear the air by a really admirable defence of the Government delivered in a manner which all who heard were obliged to admit was masterly. It was pitched in a key of true patriotism, but was absolutely free from that spirit of boastfulness which jars on the ears of all thinking men. Mr. Wyndham's statement disposes of many mysteries in regard to the war and the failure of our preparations. It is now rendered clear beyond dispute that, notwithstanding Lord Wolseley's unfortunate statement at the Authors' Club in November last, the Government was well informed by Major-General Sir John Ardagh as to the number and extent of the Boer forces. According to the information collected by the Intelligence Department the Boers started the campaign with 110 guns, of which sixteen were large Creusot guns. The number of men they could put into the field was estimated at 59,000, which is about the figure at which competent observers now guess the strength of the two republics. While the issue of peace or war was still undetermined, the Government did not feel justified in ordering out large reinforcements from home. To have done so would have destroyed the last chance of peace. As events have turned out neither of these considerations has proved of much account, the Boers having been determined to fight. Mr. Wyndham's statement as to our forces in South Africa may be summarised thus:—

TOTAL BRITISH FORCE IN SOUTH AFRICA, INCLUDING COLONIALS.
	Unmounted (including Artillery).	Mounted.	Total.
Original Garrison	7,600	2,000	9,600
October 9	12,600	3,400	16,000
January 1	83,600	19,800	103,400
On or about February 15	142,800	37,800	180,600
(a) Not including 8th Division or 4th Cavalry Brigade.

On the whole, Mr. Wyndham is to be congratulated, for he has offered a most reasonable explanation, and the favour with which his speech was received may be accepted as proof that it has had the effect of removing many false impressions which have existed, and so clearing the way for progress in the real work of the war.

Although, as they have shown by their speeches in the House, Service members are keenly anxious to say or do nothing to embarrass the Government in the present crisis they are not prepared to concede that the War Office, like the King, "can do no wrong." This, we understand, made itself abundantly evident at the meeting of Service members which took place in one of the committee rooms of the House of Commons when Parliament reassembled on Tuesday. The meeting was largely attended considering the number of military men which the war has left behind at Westminster. A formal resolution was carried urging on the Government the necessity for the organisation of an adequate and efficient force for home defence, and Sir James Fergusson was re-elected chairman and Major Rasch secretary of the committee. This represented the actual decisions arrived at by the committee, but it is probable that a far more drastic motion would have been passed but for the unwillingness of honourable and gallant members to hamper or harass the authorities. The resolution was, in fact, in the nature of a compromise. A resolution urging specific measures on the Government was originally proposed, but this was lost, as also was an amendment moved by Colonel Lockwood calling on Her Majesty's Ministers to make an early statement of what their intentions were in view of the present position of affairs. Lord Salisbury's intimation that the Government would not deprecate an inquiry into our military administration, when a more suitable period for such an investigation arrived, has given much satisfaction to those military experts at Westminster who have so long clamoured in vain for a reform of the War Department. It is generally agreed that the Prime Minister was right when he said that an inquiry into the action of either the military authorities at home or the generals in the field would be incomplete and altogether unsatisfactory if held at the present moment, when those who could give us most valuable information would not be in a position to give evidence. Colonel Welby for one, however, has expressed his opinion that a thorough and searching inquiry will have to be made at the conclusion of the war, with, he hopes, advantage to the future training of our generals and the establishment of a better Army organisation. Lord Lansdowne himself is understood to be in no way adverse to an inquiry. Indeed, it is said that he is personally in favour of a complete overhauling of all the divisions and of a revision of the system of reduplication of work. He has shown himself to be a most progressive Secretary of State for War, and it is fortunate for the Empire that the War Office is now presided over by Ministers of such broad views in a moment of national anxiety. It would be difficult to find a war minister more thoroughly fitted to hold the reins of office at such a time. This the Service members thoroughly recognise.

The present war is merciless on old and cherished traditions. Science made in Europe is being driven to the wall by science made in South Africa. So far as arms are concerned we meet the Boers on fairly equal terms, but unfortunately for us they have adapted their tactics to changed conditions, whereas ours are what they were in a past which knew not smokeless powder and long-range weapons. Chesney and others, looking into the future, predicted the growing impossibility of frontal attacks, but it is the Boer who has made us realise it by sad experience. The road to success now lies in working cautiously round the enemy's flank and cutting them off in the rear. Another tradition has received a severe blow on the banks of the Tugela. When guns were dragged into action by cart-horses, an escort of infantry was told off to protect them. Now artillery is moved by horses at the gallop, and the escort of infantry is too often merely ridiculous in its efforts to keep up with dashing and impetuous gunners, though it is a fact, which infantry officers will not perhaps be able to appreciate all at once. The loss of sixteen guns at Colenso has taught thinking soldiers that mounted rifles alone can do the work properly, and if these, like the Boers, carry spades and sand bags for the erection of breastworks, their effectiveness will be all the greater. Even our ideas on the place of the bayonet in war is undergoing a change. Long-range weapons thrust it further into the background, though there can be no doubt that in a sortie, as at Ladysmith, and when our men can push an attack home, it can be used with terrible effect. Finally, the absolute necessity for thorough scouting is being proved every day, and it is a lesson our men are learning very slowly. Nearly every reverse so far has been largely due to lack of knowledge which could have been gained by throwing out scouts on the lines that Sir Frederick Carrington would have done. At Nicholson's Nek, at Magersfontein, at Stormberg, and at Colenso our men blundered into the middle of the enemy. Sir Redvers Buller says they "will learn the value of scouting in time," which leaves something to be desired in the matter of expression, but it is painfully true.

It might have been thought that after Lord Wolseley's experience in South Africa no English commander would attempt to impress the Boers with anything but deeds. "As long as the sun shines and grass grows the Transvaal will continue an integral part of Her Majesty's dominions" said Sir Garnet, and the year was hardly out when it was an independent republic. "There will be no turning back" said Sir Redvers Buller when he crossed the Tugela, and before the end of the week he was retracing his steps to Chieveley with the relief of Ladysmith still in the distance. The Empire is thus face to face with a crisis of the first magnitude. That it will be met with dignity and courage there is no doubt. The England which emerged from the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny stronger than ever will not be seized with panic merely because two little republics are for the moment able to hold her armies in check. The duty of Englishmen at home is to sink all party differences and support the Government, while exerting pressure on it to provide for emergencies by embodying Militia unembodied units. True, Ladysmith is in no serious danger, but Cape Colony disaffection may have received fresh impetus. An enemy, however, which was recently beaten off with heavy loss by an enfeebled garrison, and could not follow us up in the retreat from Spion Kop, cannot be as full of spirit as Dr. Leyds would have us believe.

The South African despatches may be less stirring and graphic than the letters of war correspondents, but from their official character the opinions expressed and the admissions made give them a higher importance and significance. Unstinted praise is accorded to the Royal Field Artillery for heroism, endurance, and accuracy of fire, but the reports emphasise the fact that in several actions our guns were hopelessly outranged, and to be of any use had to move within ranges dangerously short, exposed to more powerful guns. Through this defect the guns of the 14th and 66th Batteries were undoubtedly lost at Colenso. How far the officer having those batteries under his command was personally responsible is not yet clear, but, apparently, there was at least a misconception of orders. Lord Methuen gives full credit to the Boers as brave and stubborn fighters worthy of our steel, but after the battle of Elands Laagte alone was the cavalry able to do any effective work. The cavalry with Lord Methuen's column were too few, and consequently too exhausted from overwork, to pursue with any effect the retreating enemy. General Hildyard's night advance to Beacon Hill and the vigorous attack on Willow Grange that followed, November 23, meet with Sir Redvers Buller's strong commendation as resulting in a strategical success of the greatest value. A force of 7,000 Boers, intended to overrun Natal, was so severely handled on the occasion by Colonel Kitchener's small force that they returned to Colenso in a manner that was more a rout than a retreat. From Lord Methuen we learn that he was committed to a frontal attack at Belmont, November 23, by the Grenadier Guards losing direction in the dark, and the consequent necessity of making the 9th Brigade conform to them. The battle of Enslin, November 25, was fought, we are told, on imperfect information. Instead of the 400 Boers expected there were in position 2,500 with several guns. Of the Modder River battle, November 28, we learn that Lord Methuen had concluded, from information received, that the entire Boer force lay at Spytfontein, and that no serious resistance awaited him at Modder River. He accordingly made dispositions for a flanking movement via Jacobsdal, intending to deliver his attack east of Spytfontein. He was also deceived as to the depth of the Modder and Riet rivers, which were falsely represented to be fordable. The despatches furnish us with much readable matter and remove many doubts which have existed as to the resourcefulness of the generals, who it is only too evident have done their best in circumstances of extreme difficulty.

A correspondent writes from Edinburgh: "Sufficient information is now to hand to justify the statement that recruiting for the Army in the Scottish district last year has been satisfactory, when taken in comparison with most of the immediate preceding years. In some regimental districts, however, there is room for improvement, but taken as a whole the results obtained are gratifying. It is matter for regret that what can be said with regard to Army recruiting is not applicable to Royal Marine enlistments and naval ratings, so far as Lieut.-Colonel Crooke's district is concerned, and which embraces the east and north-east of Scotland. From the returns furnished by Captain J. R. Hay, Black Watch, Staff Recruiting Officer at Edinburgh, the enlistments for last year appear to have totalled the handsome figure of 1,292, a figure never before reached in the history of the district. The year which nearest approached last year's returns was 1892, when the total enlistments effected were 882. Had Captain Hay an eye to numbers only, he could have increased his Army enlistments by more than 100 recruits, but being scrupulously conscientious he rejected this number of otherwise suitable candidates because of their antecedents being unsatisfactory. Of the 1,292 enlistments, 731 went to the Army. The 3rd Batn. Royal Scots received 447 of the 561 Militia enlistments, the Duke of Edinburgh's Own Edinburgh Artillery Militia 104, and the 3rd Batn. Gordon Highlanders 10. Enlistments for the Army showed that 127 entered the cavalry, 57 the Royal Artillery, 18 Royal Engineers, 10 Royal Army Medical Corps, 8 to the Army Service Corps, and 511 infantry units. The best-served cavalry regiment was the Scots Greys, who received 41 recruits, as against 19 for the 13th Hussars, 11 for the 17th Lancers, and 10 for the 14th Hussars, while fourteen other cavalry regiments divided the remainder for that branch. The Cameron Highlanders obtained the largest number of infantry recruits, 94, the Gordon Highlanders followed with 89, Seaforth Highlanders and Highland Light Infantry 83 each, Scots Guards 45, King's Own Scottish Borderers 40, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders 31, and the territorial regiment, the Royal Scots, 24. A gratifying feature of the Army enlistments is that 682 of the 731 gave their nationalities as Scottish, Midlothian (including Edinburgh and Leith) furnishing 431, Lanarkshire 55, Roxburghshire 24, Fifeshire 21, Linlithgow and Stirling shires 18 each, Aberdeenshire 16, Haddingtonshire 14, and Forfarshire 13. The number of Militiamen who transferred to the Army was 114, while the Volunteers supplied 91. Captain Hay does not attribute the great improvement in enlistment to the war, although he admits that it has had a certain amount of influence, for the first quarter's returns will compare with the last quarter. The increase in enlistments over 1898 is 543. This, it ought to be stated, is Captain Hay's first complete year in his appointment of recruiting officer at Edinburgh, and the secret of his success is not far to seek. It lies in the fact that he sticks closely to his work, and therefore not only expects but insists on those under him discharging their duty with zeal and self-respect. But great and cheering as are the results from the Edinburgh District, they are eclipsed by the returns from the 42nd (Royal Highlanders) Regimental District, which is under the command of Colonel Brickenden, and comprises Forfar (including Dundee), Perth, and Fife shires. Here the enlistments total the very substantial figure of 1,428, or an increase of 106 over the preceding year. Of the 1,428 enlistments, 689 joined the Regular Army and 739 the Militia, the 3rd Batn. Royal Highlanders receiving 552, the Forfar and Kincardine Artillery and Fife Artillery dividing the remaining 187. While this district comes next to the Glasgow recruiting district, which has the best record of any district in Scotland in point of total enlistments, its Army enlistments are below those from Edinburgh. The Black Watch has for years been most popular in its territorial district, with the result that the ranks have been and are filled with the men born in the territorial district to a greater extent than is shown to be the case with any other Scottish or Highland regiment, despite the recruiting incursions which have been made by certain units into their respective districts to raise territorial recruits by breaking down in country districts the prejudice against a soldier's life, and which happily is now disappearing. Last year, however, the popularity of the "red heckle" in its own domain seems to have had a check, for out of the 689 Army enlistments only 288 of the recruits elected to serve with the Black Watch, 208 went to other infantry corps, 74 sought cavalry service, 61 entered the Royal Artillery, 17 joined the Royal Engineers, and 23 the Scots Guards, while departmental corps profited to the extent of 18. Notwithstanding the change of front by the recruits to the territorial regiment, the Black Watch, it is safe to say, still more than holds its own among sister regiments in having in the ranks the greatest number of men born in the territorial district, for it is shown that on the 1st inst. there were 1,133, an increase of 116 over the number serving on January 1, 1899. Dundee is responsible for the larger number of recruits, having raised 774, while from such places as Perth City came 211, Kirkcaldy 89, Loch Gelly 36, Dunfermline 48, Montrose 26, Cupar 24, and Arbroath and Leven 14 each. Both in the Edinburgh and Black Watch districts the recruits were physically good and satisfactory as to education, in some instances University-bred men."

The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, which has been one of our sternest critics, and is still disposed to make the most of our mistakes in South Africa, cannot refrain from expressing warm praise for the fine outburst of national enthusiasm which is adding so greatly to our strength. It remarks that evidently Great Britain yet possesses an immense reserve of strength ready when the need calls, and that there is now no reason to doubt that victory will attend our cause in the end. In the dark hour of misfortune the German organ remarks that we have been true to our best traditions, while the colonies have come forward in a manner that is beyond all praise. Our contemporary has high praise for the courage and self-sacrifice of British officers, who seem, as of old, to know no fear and lead their men with the greatest intrepidity. Where the error has been made, it is held, has been with those highly placed, who seemed to believe that their new adversary was half barbaric, whereas he is, in truth, a highly-trained soldier and efficient in the use of modern weapons. The writer in the Deutsche Zeitung has also great praise for the rank and file, and draws attention to the long marches that are made under difficult conditions, in burning heat, often without sufficient water, followed by camping in the open on nights that are very cold and very trying. It is gratifying to discover that the splendid qualities of our troops evoke approval in those who were too ready to discover faults in their leaders.

How truly grotesque some foreign criticism of our Army is. M. Michel Delines, for instance, in the last number of the Nouvelle Revue, has a paper on the British Army. "The eyes of the whole world," he says, "are at the present time directed to Tommy Atkins." A certain M. Vassilevski, whose report M. Delines is discussing, has been visiting one or more of our barracks, and apparently has looked in at Knightsbridge. He was very much surprised to see the tall, well-set-up figures of the men, easy in their movements, and very active, who were engaged in outdoor exercises. Their twisted moustaches, well-dressed hair, and chins impeccably shaven, and their boots polished to such a degree "as to throw into ecstasy the whole world of bootmakers," proved to him clearly that these men were "of the élite and the darlings of the nursemaids in the park." He was astonished to see the energy with which they played football and other games, and he even declares that he saw them at croquet and lawn tennis, though we may remark that they would scarcely play all these games at the same season. He followed them into the interior of the barrack, and was charmed to find the air of comfort, cleanliness, and order that prevailed. The excellence of the table service, and particularly the bottles of ale and the various sauces, greatly appealed to him, and he was surprised also to find the rooms provided with electric light. In short, the comforts supplied for our soldiers were a revelation to M. Vassilevski. At the same time, his imagination conjured up the thought of the cane and the cat-o'-nine-tails. The most smiling vision, he says, which exists for Tommy Atkins arises from his traditional friendship with Mary Ann.

This surprising picture of the British private soldier is matched by one more imaginative of our officers, who are described in the Nouvelle Revue as wealthy aristocrats and sybaritic epicureans. The British officer, according to this writer, is the "lion of drawing-rooms and the hero of the Divorce Court." He is "perverted, capricious, and blasé," a reader of French novels, and a frequenter of music halls. He "dwells in a palace, has a negro for his groom and a Frenchman for his chef." He enters the Army that he may wear a brilliant uniform and live at a military club, but has no care whatever for his profession and no interest in the Service. Such is the fantastic picture which M. Vassilevski and his French exponent are presenting to the continental public. It is really astonishing to what length some writers will go in their efforts to discredit the British officer. But the present war, in regard, at least, to gallantry and devotion to the Service, should be quite as much a revelation to foreigners as M. Vassilevski's visit to the barrack was to him.

The British soldier is also discussed by the Indépendance Roumaine, published at Bucharest.

The Roumanian critic has, on the whole, a very good opinion of our soldiers, though he cannot but remark, in disparagement of them, that they are of a low class, and marked with the "gross and brutal character which is fundamental in the Anglo-Saxon." But the training in the Army emancipates them from the defects of their origin, and they become incomparable colonial soldiers, and, well led, will fight with courage and resolution in any part of the world and in any climate. Soldiers of this class, who are without real patriotism, but have the traditional loyalty of the Englishman, appear to the Roumanian writer to require officers of a very high order. And the British officer is described by the critic as a born chief, vigorous, gifted with endurance, trained by sport, possessed of cool bravery and of reasoned courage. Our officers "hunt the tiger in India, the elephant in Southern Africa, and the native everywhere," and are always ready for adventures. They are marvellous leaders of men in the hour of combat, and are just the officers needed for colonial troops. "For the most part they despise strategy and tactics," but they have the instinct of war and compensate for their deficiencies by their coolness and courage. "Such men as Lord Wolseley, Lord Roberts, and Lord Kitchener are few; they have, in addition to their experience of special wars, scientific knowledge of the great principles, but the good sense and discerning spirit which are with them valuable auxiliaries to success are qualities common to British officers."

These are only illustrations of the great attention which is now being directed in Europe to the British Army. There are few of our foreign contemporaries that do not recognise the sterling qualities of our officers and men. They give them credit for gallantry, courage, and endurance, and, generally speaking, have nothing but praise, except for the generals and the staff. At the same time, while confessing themselves unable to understand much of what has happened, most of the foreign military papers write in a tone of moderation, and are evidently prepared for the coming success for our arms.

We learn that Lord Roberts is desirous of obtaining the services of more Militia battalions, and that some six or eight will therefore shortly embark for active service in South Africa. It speaks well for the soldierly qualities of this much-underrated force that the difficulty of the military authorities is not to find units to go out, but rather to decide which of the many volunteering can be accepted.

Attention has been drawn to the question of promotion in the Royal Artillery. There is one point in this connection which calls for remark. No 2nd lieutenant in the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers is promoted to a lieutenancy until he has three years' service. As this rule does not obtain in any other branch of the Service the 2nd lieutenants of the scientific corps are superseded by all 2nd lieutenants of the line, cavalry, &c., joining at the same time as themselves, and long afterwards. At the present moment, although there are many vacancies amongst the lieutenants of the Royal Artillery, they are not filled up. The 2nd lieutenants are thus deprived of the small advantage of the extra 1s. a day to which they would otherwise be entitled, to say nothing of the irritation occasioned by constant supersession. It is a matter which ought to be put right, for it cannot be to the good of the Service for the young officers of the Ordnance Corps to be placed at a distinct disadvantage.

We are asked to state that the honorary treasurer of the Officers' Families Fund is Colonel Gildea, 23, Queen Anne's-gate, to whom subscriptions should be sent. All applications and communications should be addressed to the Marchioness of Lansdowne, or to the honorary secretary, Mrs. Edward Hope, Lansdowne House, Berkeley-square, and will be treated as strictly confidential.

The Queen has approved of the cavalry quarters at Windsor being in future named the Combermere Barracks.

Army Personal.

Elsewhere we publish extracts from the South African despatches. The following refer more particularly to the personnel of the forces engaged. Sir George White defers his mention of individuals. Writing of the battle of Belmont, November 23, Lord Methuen says:—

"Lieut.-Col. Crabbe, 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards, was leading with conspicuous courage, when he and Lieut. Blundell were shot by a wounded Boer. The latter officer, I regret to say, has since died.

The 1st Batn. Coldstream Guards attacked the ridge south-west of Mount Blanc. Col. Codrington handled his battalion coolly and well. Capt. Fielding, Lieut. the Hon. C. Douglas-Pennant, and Lieut. Price Jones merit praise for coolness and good company leading. The 2nd Batn. Coldstreams were well handled, Major the Hon. A. Henniker's services proving of great value; Major Shute is honourably mentioned.

At this time Major-Gen. Fetherstonhaugh, to the deep regret of all ranks, was wounded; I cannot exaggerate his loss to myself. Col. Money, Northumberland Fusiliers, took over the command, and the party on the ridge suffered from a distant, but severe, cross-fire.

By 10.30 my division was in camp, by one all my wounded were in a comfortable house being carefully tended, by five p.m. next day the hospital train conveyed the less severe cases to Orange River, the graver cases to Cape Town. This is the most perfect work I have ever heard of in war, and reflects the highest credit on Col. Townsend, R.A.M.C. The wound of the brigadier of 9th Brigade unfortunately precludes any mention of officers who distinguished themselves, nor can I help this fine brigade, for I had little occasion for noticing more than the excellent behaviour of the regiments under fire, and can only select one officer, namely, Major Earle, Yorkshire Light Infantry, whose leading, knowledge, and coolness were more noticeable.

"Capt. Bulfin, the brigade major, on whose shoulders a great responsibility rested, did admirable work. Capt. R. Brise is mentioned for good work done, and Capt. Nugent's services were of value.

"Major-Gen. Sir H. Colville has already gained my entire confidence, nothing is ever likely to shake his coolness."

Major-General Sir Henry Colville writes:—

"Lieut.-Col. Codrington's battalion was well and correctly handled. He draws particular attention to the skilful handling of his company by Capt. Fielding, the coolness displayed by Lieut. the Hon. C. Douglas-Pennant, and the complete control exercised over his company by 2nd Lieut. Price Jones. Lieut.-Col. Stopford's battalion had less severe work than the others of my brigade, but I consider its advance under fire was distinctly well performed. Lieut.-Col. Stopford particularly calls attention to the services of Major the Hon. A. Henniker-Major and Capt. Shute.

"I should like to draw the attention of the general officer commanding to the assistance rendered me by my A.D.C., Capt. G. Nugent, and my brigade-major, Capt. Ruggles Brise. The latter was entrusted with leading the two battalions to Gun Hill, a task in which he was handicapped by never having seen the ground by daylight."

With reference to the battle of Enslin Lord Methuen remarks:—

"I beg to bring to your notice No. 1843 Colour-Sergeant Waterhouse, King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry, who at a critical moment acted with great coolness in shooting down an enemy who had been doing great execution on our men at 1,150 yds. Lieut. Taylor, A.D.C., is favourably mentioned. . . . I again draw attention to the exceptional organising power of Col. Townsend, R.A.M.C., at Swink's Pan at 11.30 p.m. I was informed that owing to all the ambulances having been used for taking the wounded to the train at Belmont, I had scarcely a field hospital mounted officer, only three ambulances, and three stretchers. I knew I had to fight next morning, so got together 50 blankets in order to carry wounded with help of rifles. I also sent to Col. Townsend to make arrangements for wounded by three a.m., a messenger having to ride seven miles to him. He met me on the field with full supply of ambulances, and I never saw anything more of him or the wounded because he had a train ready for them between Graspan and Belmont. His only complaint is that there is not much of his mules left, an observation which applies equally to men and animals."

Major-General Hildyard in his despatch dated November 24 on the operation at Willow Grange says:—

"The conduct of all ranks throughout the force engaged was exemplary. Col. Kitchener led the assaulting force with energy and judgment, and all ranks of the 2nd Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment behaved admirably. Major Hobbs of that battalion was taken prisoner owing to his remaining too long attending to the wounded. He led the first line of the assault with judgment and good sense. The services of Lieut. Nicholson, 2nd Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment, have been specially brought to my notice for attention to duty and the situation when others were inclined to deal with matters of less importance. I recommend him for special reward. I also recommend Pte. Montgomery, 2nd Batn. West Yorkshire Regiment, for a Distinguished Conduct medal. After being wounded in one leg he continued fighting in the firing line until again wounded. Lieut.-Col. Harris, 2nd Batn. East Surrey Regiment, commanded the second line, and Major Pearse, 2nd Batn. East Surrey Regiment, the third line of the assaulting force. The behaviour of all ranks of the 2nd Batn. East Surrey Regiment when engaged was satisfactory under great difficulties.

"Col. Hinde, 1st Batn. Border Regiment, commanded the supporting force, which he moved forward by my orders to a supporting position shortly after daylight.

"Five companies of the Border Regiment, commanded by Major Pelly, were on the right, and those of the 2nd Batn. Queen's, under Lieut.-Col. Hamilton, on the left. The Durban Light Infantry, under Lieut.-Col. Meeubin, took up a position in reserve further back. Lieut. James, R.N., of the Tartar, commanded the naval 12pr. gun and did good service, though a Creusot gun which the enemy brought into action had the range of him.

"Major Ricketts commanded the bearer company and did good service both at the time and in connection with the removal of the wounded. My staff officers, Major Munro, brigade-major, and Lieut. Blair, A.D.C., were of good value to me.

"The services of the guide, Mr. Chapman, who was so unfortunately killed, were of the greatest value. His intimate knowledge of the ground alone made it possible to carry out the operation. I sincerely trust it may be found possible to bestow on his widow, Mrs. Chapman, of Nottingham-road, some mark of recognition of the distinguished service rendered by her late husband."

Now as to Modder River. Here Lord Methuen's mention of personal service is more general:—

"I should like to bring to notice the names of the following officers and rank and file who distinguished themselves during the day:—

"Major Count Gleichen, C.M.G., for the coolness shown by him throughout the engagement, especially in attending to the wounded under a heavy fire.

"Sergeant Brown and Pte. Martin, 3rd Batn. Grenadier Guards, who helped him, were both shot.

"Sergeant-Major Cocke, 3rd Batn. Grenadiers, displayed remarkable coolness under fire.

"Lieut. the Hon. A. Russell showed great coolness in working the machine gun, which he did with marked success.

"Major Granville Smith, Coldstream Guards, in volunteering to find a ford, which he did in dangerous mud and a strong river.

"Capt. and Adj. Steele, Coldstream Guards, for excellent service during the day.

"Sergeant-Major S. Wright, Coldstream Guards, showed great coolness when a change of ammunition carts was being made, and was of great value at a critical time.

"Native Dvr. Matthews for making the other natives stick to their carts, when they would otherwise have bolted.

"Drill and Colour-Sergeant Price, Coldstream Guards, at Belmont and at Modder River, rendered excellent service whilst commanding half a company.

"Drill and Colour-Sergeant Plunkett, Coldstream Guards, collected 150 men, and helped the 9th Brigade crossing the river under Capt. Lord Newtown Butler.

"1825 Lance-Corpl. Webb, Coldstream Guards, twice asked leave to go into the open to bind up the wounds of a Grenadier; under a heavy fire he succeeded in his object.

"Capt. Hervey Bathurst, Grenadier Guards, was of great value in rallying a number of Grenadiers and Coldstreams shaken by the fire.

"I call special attention to Col. Paget's cheerfulness and intelligence under the most trying surroundings.

"He draws attention to Capt. Moores, R.A.M.C., who, although wounded in the hand, said nothing, but continued his duties. Also, he draws attention to the good services of the Master of Ruthven, Scots Guards. The valuable services of Capt. Nugent, A.D.C., and Capt. Ruggles-Brise are again noted.

"The names of Lieut.-Col. Barter, King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry, and Major the Hon. C. Lambton, Northumberland Fusiliers, are mentioned for having rendered invaluable assistance to their brigadier. Capt. Bulfin, Yorkshire Regiment, did his duty admirably.

"Lieut. Percival, Northumberland Fusiliers, managed with great difficulty to establish himself with a small party on a point near the railway, from which, by his judgment and coolness, he was able to keep down the fire of the enemy, many of his small party being killed.

"3499 Lance-Corpl. R. Delaney, 4160 Pte. J. East, 4563 Pte. Segar, 4497 Pte. Snowden, Northumberland Fusiliers, under a very heavy fire picked up and brought in a wounded man of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders; No. 3955 Pte. Smarley, Northumberland Fusiliers, No. 1 of a Maxim detachment, who showed great coolness and judgment when wounded.

"Major Lindsay, R.A., 75th Battery, ignored a painful wound, and continued in command of his battery. Lieut. Begbie, R.A., suddenly placed in command of his battery, led it, and brought it into action with great coolness.

"Capt. Farrell, wounded a second time, continued to do his duty, having first placed a wounded man on one of the gun carriages. Wounded gunners and drivers continued at their duty.

"Lieut. Rochford Boyd, R.A., on this, as on former occasions, showed himself reliable and capable of acting without orders.

"I personally bring to notice the value of Lieut.-Col. Rhodes's service and Major Streatfield's service in sending forward reinforcements to Major-Gen. Pole-Carew, for on this movement the result of the evening's success depended."

To the late Lieut.-Colonel Northcott, C.B., a special reference is made by Lord Methuen:—

"Lieut.-Col. Northcott, who never left me, fell mortally wounded. The Army has lost one of the ablest officers in Her Majesty's Service, and I cannot express the grief his death has caused me. He was beloved by everyone who knew him."

In the Gazette of Tuesday last appear the despatches of Lord Kitchener and Sir Reginald Wingate dealing with the operations which led to the defeat and death of the Khalifa in November last. The circumstances in which the capture was made are too well known to need to be recalled. The machinery of his operations appears to have been perfect. In sixty-three hours Sir Reginald and his troops covered a distance of fifty-seven miles and gained two victories. Colonel Wingate pays a tribute to the bravery of the Khalifa which was deserved.

In forwarding Sir Reginald Wingate's despatch Lord Kitchener says:—

"In connection with the conduct of the above operations I desire to specially mention the names of the following officers:—

"Lieut.-Col. Talbot, R.E., Director of Military Intelligence.

"Lieut.-Col. Jackson, commanding 2nd Infantry Brigade.

"Major Hamilton, Royal West Surrey Regiment, D.A.G.

"Brevet-Major Peake, R.A., commanding artillery.

"Capt. Gamble, Lincolnshire Regiment, commanding 1st Batn.

"Capt. O'Connell, Shropshire Light Infantry, commanding 2nd Batn., and subsequently in command of the Duem garrison.

"Lieut. Graham, Royal Lancashire Regiment, A.D.C.

"Col. Sir R. Wingate's previous services on the staff are so notorious that I need not allude to them; he has now shown himself to be the capable leader of men I felt sure he would prove himself to be should the occasion arise. The operations under him were carried out with consummate ability, energy, and determination, and he has struck the last blow at Mahdism.

"I freely endorse Col. Wingate's remarks on the good services of the officers and men he has mentioned.

"Brevet-Majors Watson, King's Royal Rifle Corps, and Wilkinson, Lincolnshire Regiment, acted as D.A.A.G. (B) and D.A.A.G. (A) respectively. The valuable qualities of these excellent staff officers are well known to you. During the recent operations they have given fresh proof of their energy and capacity, and on every occasion they proved of the greatest assistance to me. Major Watson carried my telegraphic despatch to you from the Khalifa's camp to Fach Shoya with great speed, and was accompanied on this mission by Lieut. Cowan, R.N."

"Capt. Bulkeley-Johnson, 2nd Dragoons, commanded the 7th Squadron. The comparatively small force of cavalry available rendered the duties of scouting and reconnoitring very arduous. The behaviour of the men was excellent throughout, and they showed much dash in pursuit.

"It is a very great pleasure to me to bring to your notice the excellent services performed by the artillery under Capt. Boulnois, Franks, and Simpson-Baikie, R.A. Throughout the operations they commanded their various units to the greatest possible advantage, and showed an amount of dash and gallantry which largely contributed to our success. Capt. Franks took charge of the galloping Maxims in all patrols and reconnaissances. The unflinching manner in which the guns and Maxims were served in the attack on Fedil's camp is worthy of all praise.

"Capt. Howard, A.S.C., acted as staff officer of supplies, performing general staff duties in addition, and Lieut. Hoskins, North Staffordshire Regiment, commanded the transport of over 1,000 animals. The energy and activity displayed by these two officers, and the arduous nature of their duties, which were carried out to my entire satisfaction, induce me to specially bring their good services to your notice.

"Lieut. Newall, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, acted as staff officer in charge of water supply, and in this capacity proved himself a capable and energetic officer.

"Lieut. Stallard, R.A.M.C., was in charge of the medical arrangements, and was ably assisted by Lieut. Nickerson, R.A.M.C. These officers did all that was possible, not only to alleviate the sufferings of our wounded, but were also indefatigable in attending to the Dervish wounded, large numbers of whom passed through their hands.

"Capt. Lewis, A.V.D., was in charge of the veterinary department, and carried out his arduous duties in a most satisfactory manner.

"The names of the following officers have also been brought to my notice for good services:—

"Brevet-Major Sir H. Hill, Bart., Royal Irish Fusiliers, Irregular Soudanese Battalion.

"Capt. Phipps, Dorsetshire Regiment, second in command, 13th Soudanese, and acted temporarily as staff officer to officer commanding infantry brigade; Norbury, Worcestershire Regiment, Camel Corps, second in command; Herbert, Royal Highlanders, Irregular Soudanese Battalion; and A. Cameron, Cameron Highlanders, attached to 9th Soudanese.

"Lieuts. Whishaw, South Staffordshire Regiment, 13th Soudanese; Paget, West Yorkshire Regiment, Camel Corps; Langdon, Liverpool Regiment, 13th Soudanese; McKay, Middlesex Regiment, transport; Ingle, Middlesex Regiment, acting second in command, 9th Soudanese, horse shot; Wilson, East Lancashire Regiment, attached to 9th Soudanese; and the Hon. E. Guest, 1st Life Guards, Camel Corps.

"2nd Lieuts. the Hon. A. Hore-Ruthven, Cameron Highlanders, Camel Corps; Flint, Royal Irish Rifles, transport; Scott-Barbour, Highland Light Infantry, transport; and Nicklin, Oxfordshire Light Infantry, transport.

Of those who served under him Sir Reginald Wingate reports:—

"In conclusion, I have to submit for your favourable consideration the names of the following officers and non-commissioned officers:—

"To Brevet-Col. Lewis, commanding the infantry brigade, my most cordial thanks are due. The previous good services of this gallant officer are well known. On him devolved the arduous duty of rapidly concentrating the flying column at Fachi Shoya, prior to my arrival. Throughout the recent operations he has given fresh proof of his capacity for command and to his energy and great practical knowledge of the handling of troops I attribute, in a large measure, the success which has been achieved. Col. Lewis has brought to my notice the good services performed by his brigade-major, Capt. Doughty, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, and by Capt. Smyth V.O., 2nd Dragoon Guards, his intelligence officer and A.D.C.

"Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Hickman, Worcester Regiment, acted as my chief staff officer throughout the operations. On him devolved all the details of organisation of the force, and his capacity as a staff officer of exceptional ability was never more apparent. His energy, foresight, and tact mark him out as a most valuable officer.

"Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Mahon, 8th Hussars, acted as A.A.G., and was also in charge of the intelligence department. I cannot speak in sufficiently strong terms of the excellence of the services performed by this officer. I invariably placed him in general command of all the mounted troops; his personal disregard for danger, intrepid scouting, and careful handling of men all fit him for high command.

"Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Henry, Northumberland Fusiliers, was in command of the Camel Corps. During the long night marches his corps was charged with guarding the flanks, and in the reconnaissances it served as a temporary escort to the guns, pending the arrival of the infantry. In the attack on Fedil's position Col. Henry disposed his command to the best possible advantage, and the successful repulse of the determined Dervish rush towards the guns was, in a large measure, due to the steady and accurate fire of his men.

"Major Maxse, Coldstream Guards, Brevet-Major Doran, Royal Irish Regiment, and Brevet-Major Gorringe, R.E., commanded the 13th, 9th, and Irregular Soudanese Battalions respectively, and I cannot speak too highly of the excellent behaviour on the line of march, and the gallant conduct in action of every officer, non-commissioned officer, and man composing this infantry brigade.

A correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, referring to Major-Gen. Woodgate, who was dangerously wounded at Spion Kop, says: "He was as brave as a Goorkha, and worked like a trooper until he fell wounded in the forehead by a fragment of a shell about two in the afternoon. Even then he protested that he was all right, and had to be held down on a stretcher. The men have the highest admiration for him. He set them an example throughout. In the advance and among the rifle firing he seemed always heedless of danger."

"The British plague," as the influenza has been termed, though as a matter of fact the epidemic has been quite cosmopolitan, after raging for months in these isles, is dying out exhausted, let us hope, by its excesses. It has been universal in the reach of its operations, and has attacked all sorts and conditions, preferring perhaps the elderly and well-to-do and handing them over to pneumonia or bronchitis, and it has not spared the physicians, who sometimes could not heal themselves. Recently the veterans of the Royal Hospital were concerned to hear news that their principal medical officer had been obliged to take to his bed. For weeks the old soldiers assembled every morning at the door of Dr. Ligertwood's quarters to hear how their honoured physician and friend was faring, and their anxiety extended to a large circle outside the building, not only in this country but wherever British soldiers were serving, as there are few stations where the relatives of pensioners are not to be found, and for thirty-three years Dr. Ligertwood has fulfilled his duties. Since his appointment he has never been absent a day save on account of some indisposition, and he has long been regarded by all as guide, philosopher, and friend, for he was all three in the discharge of his affectionate care of body and mind of those under his charge. From the gallant Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart, who won his spurs in India before the Mutiny, where Dr. Ligertwood also made his mark, down to the latest inmate of the hospital, all were glad indeed to hear that, nursed by his excellent wife, his fine constitution enabled Dr. Ligertwood, after a three weeks' battle with influenza, to resume medical charge. Surely he has been strangely overlooked in the distribution of honours by the authorities? It is not too late now.

Captain E. Crawley, 12th Lancers, has been distinguishing himself on the West Coast of Africa, whither he went some time ago for service. It appears from letters just to hand that on November 15 a column left Lokoja under Captain Crawley's command, who had with him Captain W. J. H. McCorquodale, Lancashire Artillery, the object of the expedition being of a punitive nature. This column co-operated eight days march from Lokoja, at a place called Egbi in the Yagba country, with a smaller column from Ilorin under Lieutenant W. St. A. Wake, D.S.O., Middlesex Regiment. The offending town was attacked and destroyed, the mission being entirely successful. The average daily march of the columns was twenty-five miles a day, in dense bush country and over stony ground, and not a man fell out.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

SUMMARY OF THE WAR.

Saturday, Jan. 27.

Lord Roberts reported to-day that on the 25th Gen. French reconnoitred the enemy's position and found him strongly entrenched at Pietfontein.

A transport sailed from Halifax, Nova Scotia, with 350 men of the 2nd Batn. Canadian Mounted Rifles.

A meeting of the Defence Committee of the Cabinet was held in the afternoon at the War Office. Among the Ministers attending were Mr. Balfour, who called at the Admiralty before the meeting, Lord Lansdowne, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and Mr. Chamberlain.

Notice issued "by order" from the War Office:—

"The pressure of work renders it imperative to limit admission to the central hall of the War Office on weekdays between the hours of 9.45 a.m. and 6.45 p.m. to the staff officers of the department, to persons calling to see them on business, and to members of the Houses of Parliament. No other persons will during the session be admitted to the front hall."

A special Army Order issued intimating that the Clare Artillery, 3rd Batn. Leicestershire Regiment, and 3rd Batn. Royal Berkshire Regiment are to be forthwith embodied. The Clare Artillery on Feb. 12, and the 3rd Batn. Leicestershire Regiment and 3rd Batn. Royal Berkshire Regiment not earlier than Feb. 12.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphed:—

"At a monster meeting of Hindus and Mahomedans held in the Town Hall here under the presidency of the Maharajah of Darbhanga a resolution was passed giving expression to the deep and abiding loyalty which animates all classes of the Queen's subjects and their unswerving attachment to the Throne and person of Her Majesty. It was decided also to raise subscriptions to supplement the Lord Mayor's fund and to offer prayers for the victory of the British arms in all places of worship. The utmost enthusiasm prevailed, and Rs.63,000 were subscribed on the spot. It is no exaggeration to say that the sympathy of all races in India is absolutely with the Government of their Queen-Empress and her Ministers."

The Englishman in commenting on the meeting said:—

"The spontaneous demonstration speaks for itself. The proceedings are the most flattering tribute that the Empire has yet received, and the debt of gratitude will not be forgotten when the storm has ceased to blow. Evidently among British subjects in India there is no feeling that our rule is tyrannical and unjust."

Sunday, Jan. 28.

The War Office during the afternoon issued the following despatch from Sir Redvers Buller, dated Spearman's Camp, Saturday, 6.10 p.m.:—

"On Jan. 20 Sir Charles Warren, as I have reported, drove back the enemy and obtained possession of the southern crests of the higher tableland which extends from the line Acton Homes-Honger's Poort to the western Ladysmith hills. From then to the 25th he remained close in contact with the enemy, who held a strong position in the range of small kopjes stretching from north-west to south-east across the plateau from Acton Homes through Spion Kop to the left bank of the Tugela. The actual position held was perfectly tenable but did not lend itself to advance, as the southern slopes were so steep that Sir C. Warren could not get an effective artillery position and the supply of the troops with water was a difficulty. On the 23rd I assented to his attacking Spion Kop, a large hill—indeed, a mountain—which was evidently the key of the position, but was far more accessible from the north than from the south. On the night of the 23rd he seized Spion Kop, but found it very difficult to hold, as its perimeter was too large, and water, which we had been led to believe existed, in this extraordinarily dry season was found very deficient. The crests were held all that day against severe attacks and heavy shell fire. Our men fought with great gallantry, and I would especially mention the conduct of the 2nd Cameronians and the 3rd King's Royal Rifle Corps, who supported the attack on the mountain from the steepest side, and in each case fought their way to the top, and the 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers and 2nd Middlesex, who magnificently maintained the best traditions of the British Army throughout the trying day of the 24th, and Thorneycroft's Mounted Infantry, who fought throughout the day equally well alongside of them. Major-Gen. Woodgate, who was in command at the summit, being wounded, the officer who succeeded him decided on the night of the 24th-25th to abandon the position, and did so before daylight, 25th. I reached Sir C. Warren's camp at five a.m. on the 25th, and decided that a second attack on Spion Kop would be useless, and that the enemy's right was too strong to allow me to force it. Accordingly I decided to withdraw the force to the south of the Tugela. At six a.m. we commenced withdrawing the train, and by eight a.m., the 27th, Sir C. Warren's force was concentrated south of the Tugela without the loss of a man or a pound of stores. The fact that the force could withdraw from actual touch—in cases the lines were less than 1,000 yd. apart—with the enemy in the perfect manner it did is, I think, sufficient evidence of the moral of the troops; and that we were permitted to withdraw our cumbersome ox and mule transport across a river 85 yd. broad with 20 ft. banks and a very swift stream unmolested is, I think, proof that the enemy has been taught to respect our soldiers' fighting powers."

The Upada, the last of the Indian transports, left Bombay for South Africa, conveying 320 reserve horses, a transport section, 12 15pr. guns, and six 4.7 naval guns.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN DESPATCHES.

The first official despatches received by mail from the seat of war were issued on the night of the 26th inst. They are sent home by Sir Redvers Buller, and include reports from Lieut.-Gens. Sir George White and Methuen, dealing with the actions at Glencoe, Elands Laagte, Rietfontein, Willow Grange, Belmont, Enslin, Modder River, and Colenso.

WHY GLENCOE WAS HELD.

The first report is from Sir George White, dated Ladysmith, Nov. 2. Sir Redvers Buller, in his covering letter, which was written at Cape Town seven days later, says the despatch was handed to him on Nov. 8 by Lieut.-Gen. French on his arrival from Durban. "It does not," says Gen. Buller, "seem to call for any remarks from me." Sir George White first of all mentions that he reached Durban and assumed command of the forces in Natal on Oct. 7, proceeding direct to Maritzburg. After describing the distribution of the troops, Imperial and Colonial, then in the colony, Gen. White says:—

"The information available regarding the positions occupied by the armies of the two Dutch Republics showed the great bulk of the forces of the Orange Free State were massed near the passes of the Drakensberg mountains, west of Ladysmith. The troops of the South African Republic were concentrated at various points west, north, and east of the northern angle of Natal. On Oct. 10 the Governor informed me that Her Majesty's Government had received an ultimatum from that of the South African Republic, and that the outbreak of war on the evening of Oct. 11 might be regarded as certain. Since my arrival in the colony I have been much impressed by the exposed situation of the garrison of Glencoe, and on the evening of Oct. 10 I had an interview on the subject with His Excellency the Governor, at which I laid before him my reasons for considering it expedient, from a military point of view, to withdraw that garrison, and to concentrate all my available troops at Ladysmith. After full discussion His Excellency recorded his opinion that such a step would involve grave political results and possibilities of so serious a nature that I determined to accept the military risk of holding Dundee as the lesser of two evils. I proceeded in person to Ladysmith on Oct. 11, sending on Lieut.-Gen. Sir William Penn Symons to take command at Glencoe.

"The Boers crossed the frontier both on the north and west on Oct. 12, and next day the Transvaal flag was hoisted at Charlestown. My great inferiority in numbers necessarily confined me strategically to the defensive, but tactically my intention was and is to strike vigorously whenever opportunity offers. Up to Oct. 19 the enemy from the north were engaged in moving down on the Biggars-Dundee line in three columns. The main column, under Gen. Joubert, occupied Newcastle, and marched south by the road leading thence on Glencoe Junction. A second column under Viljoen crossed Botha's Pass and moved south over the Biggarsberg, cutting the railway from Glencoe Junction to Ladysmith on Oct. 19 at Elands Laagte, where they took up a position. A third column under Lucas Meyer crossed the Buffalo River, marching west on Dundee, and arrived within striking distance of that place on the night of Oct. 19. Meanwhile the Free State forces west of Ladysmith contented themselves with occupying the country at the foot of the Drakensberg Range, without approaching within striking distance of Ladysmith."

TALANA HILL.

Gen. White then deals with the advance of the Boers and the battle of Talana Hill. He thus describes the capture of a squadron of the 18th Hussars:—

"The 18th Hussars received orders at 5.40 a.m. to get round the enemy's right flank and be ready to cut off his retreat. They were accompanied by a portion of the mounted infantry and a machine gun. Making a wide turning movement they gained the eastern side of Talana Hill. Here Lieut.-Col. Möller halted with one squadron 18th Hussars, the machine gun, and the mounted infantry, sending his other two squadrons farther to the east. These two latter squadrons took part in the pursuit of the enemy, who retreated eastward, but Lieut.-Col. Möller and the troops with him appear, so far as can be ascertained, to have pursued in a northerly direction, to have come in contact with superior forces not previously engaged, and to have been surrounded and forced to surrender."

ELANDS LAAGTE.

Of the battle of Elands Laagte Sir George White says:—

"The Boer losses were heavy, being estimated at over 100 killed, 108 wounded, and 148 prisoners. Two of their guns were captured and brought into Ladysmith. Our own losses were also considerable, consisting of four officers and 37 men killed, 31 officers and 175 wounded, and 10 men missing. The Imperial Light Horse and the 2nd Batn. Gordon Highlanders, who encountered the severest resistance during the progress of the attack, suffered the most severely."

THE RETREAT FROM DUNDEE.

Sir George White continues:—

"Turning now to affairs at Dundee, which I have already described up to the evening of Oct. 20. On the morning of Oct. 21 it was ascertained that the enemy had cleared off from the east of that place, but very large bodies were reported to be advancing from the north and north-west. Gen. Yule moved his camp on this day to a more defensible position to the south of the previous camp, but the enemy, bringing up heavy artillery to the shoulder of the Impati mountain, rendered the site untenable, and another move was made to a site still further south. On Oct. 22 Gen. Yule decided to effect a junction with the troops at Ladysmith. The troops therefore moved off by the Helpmakaar road, reaching Beith on the 23rd, and Waschbank Spruit on Oct. 24 at 9.30 a.m. Knowing of Gen. Yule's approach,

I moved out this day to Rietfontein to cover his flank from attack, and there fought an action which will be described later. Meanwhile Gen. Yule, hearing my guns in action, halted his infantry at Waschbank Spruit, and moved west with his artillery and mounted troops, in hope of being able to participate in the action. The distance, however, was found to be too great, and he rejoined his infantry at Waschbank Spruit, halting there for the night. On the morning of Oct. 25 Gen. Yule's force marched to Sunday's River, whence it reached Ladysmith on Oct. 25, being joined en route by a force detached by me to meet it."

RIETFONTEIN.

"Reverting to my action at Rietfontein on Oct. 24, I may mention in general terms that my object was not to drive the enemy out of any positions, but simply to prevent him crossing the Newcastle road from west to east, and so falling on Gen. Yule's flank. This object was attained with entire success, the enemy suffering severely from our shrapnel fire, which was very successful in searching the reverse slopes of the hills on which he was posted. Our own loss amounted to one officer and 11 men killed, six officers and 97 men wounded, and two missing. The details of this action, as well as the various plans and returns, which should accompany a despatch, will be forwarded later; but I am anxious that this report should be sent off at once, as it is very doubtful whether any communications by rail with Pietermaritzburg will remain open after to-day. For the same reason I have omitted all personal mention of the very many officers and men who have performed services of the utmost gallantry and distinction. In a further despatch I hope to bring those services prominently to your notice."

COLENZO.

In a despatch from Chieveley Camp, dated Dec. 17, Gen. Buller says:—

"I have the honour to report that I moved off from Chieveley and Doornkop Spruit camps at four a.m. on the 15th inst.

"Colenso Bridge is the centre of a semi-circle surrounded by hills, the crests of which dominate it by about 1,400 ft. at a distance of about 4½ miles. Near the bridge are four small lozenge-shaped steep-sided, hog-backed, hills, each as it is further from the river being higher and longer than the next inner one. These hills, the first of which is known as Fort Wylie, were very strongly entrenched with well-built, rough stone walls along every crest line that offered; in some cases there were as many as three tiers. It was a very awkward position to attack, but I thought that if I could effect a lodgment under cover of Fort Wylie, the other hills would to a great extent mask each other, and shell fire and want of water would clear them out in time. All visible defences had been heavily shelled by eight naval guns on the 13th and 14th, but though some of the defences were damaged and accurate ranges obtained, we failed to induce the enemy to disclose his own position or to reply in any way to our fire. My idea was to try and cross the Bridle Drift first; if we got over, the troops would move down the river and help the crossing at the main drift; if we did not get over, the troops there would contain all the enemy on the western side, and would so cover the flank of the attack on the main drift by the bridge.

"Gen. Hart advanced to the attack of the Bridle Drift, but did not find it. (I heard afterwards that a dam had been thrown below it and the water made deep.) Watching his advance, I saw his troops pressing on into the salient loop of the river. I saw at once that if he got there he would be under a severe cross-fire, and sent to tell him to recall them. In the interval he had become heavily engaged, and I sent two battalions of Gen. Lyttelton's brigade and Col. Parsons's brigade division R.F.A. (two batteries) to help extricate him. This they did, and subsequently, as ordered, came to the right to support the main advance. At the same time Gen. Hildyard was advancing on the bridge, and as I was proceeding in that direction to superintend the attack and also to ascertain what Col. Long's brigade division, which was very heavily engaged on the right, was doing, I received a message that he had been driven from his guns by superior infantry fire. I believed at the moment that the six naval had shared the same fate, and I at once decided that without guns it would be impossible for me to force the passage. I directed Gen. Hildyard to divert the right of his two leading battalions to the east of the railway and direct it upon the guns, his left battalion to advance on Colenso, but not to become too hotly engaged."

THE LOSS OF THE GUNS.

"These orders were admirably carried out by the Royal West Surrey and the Devonshire Regiments, but Fort Wylie, which had been silenced by the fire of the 14th and 66th Batteries, was reoccupied, and the fire was so heavy that no troops could live in the open by the guns. At the first attempt to withdraw them, Capt. Schofield, R.A., Capt. Congreve, Rifle Brigade, and Lieut. Hon. F. Roberts, King's Royal Rifles, with Corpl. Nurse, and Dvrs. H. Taylor, Young, Petts, Rockall, Lucas, and Williams, all of the 66th Battery, brought off two guns, but the enemy then found out what was being done, and such a deadly fire was kept up that although several attempts were made to cover the fatal 500 yd. either horses or men, or both, were killed before they got to the guns. A final most gallant attempt was made by Capt. H. L. Reed, of the 7th Field Battery, who came down with three teams to see if he could help. He and five of the 13 men were wounded and one killed, and 13 horses killed out of 22, before they got half-way up to the guns. After that I could not allow another attempt and the guns were abandoned.

"Fortunately the naval guns had not reached the position taken up by the 14th and 66th Batteries when fire was opened; their drivers, however, bolted, and their oxen were stampeded or killed, but by dint of hard work all the guns and the ammunition waggons were hauled out of range. All worked well, and Lieut. Ogilvy, Tartar, and Gnr. Wright, Terrible, particularly rendered excellent service. These guns, however, had been rendered immobile for the day. During all this time and throughout the day the two 4.7 in. and four 12 pr. naval guns of the naval brigade and Durban Naval Volunteers, under Capt. E. P. Jones, R.N., were being admirably served, and succeeded in silencing every one of the enemy's guns they could locate.

"Col. Long, R.A., has been dangerously wounded, and I am unable to obtain his explanation. His orders were to come into action covered by the 6th Brigade, which brigade was not, as he knew, intended to advance on Colenso. I had personally explained to him where I wished him to come into action, and with the naval guns only, as the position was not within effective range for his field guns. Instead of this he advanced with his batteries so fast that he left both his infantry escort and his oxen-drawn naval guns behind, and came into action under Fort Wylie, a commanding trebly-entrenched hill, at a range of 1,200 yd., and I believe within 300 yd. of the enemy's rifle pits. The men fought their guns like heroes and silenced Fort Wylie, but the issue could never have been in doubt, and gradually they were all shot down. I am told that 2nd Lieut. Holford, 14th Field Battery, displayed particular gallantry when all were good.

"After this, I directed a withdrawal to our camps. It was accomplished in good order. There was no pursuit, and the shell fire was negligible and controlled by our naval guns. The day was fearfully hot, the sky cloudless, the atmosphere sultry and airless, and the country waterless in most parts."

GALLANTRY AT COLENZO.

In a despatch from Chieveley Camp, dated Dec. 16, Gen. Buller says:—

"I have the honour to bring the following cases of distinguished services in the field to your notice:—

"At Colenso, on Dec. 15, the detachments serving the guns of the 14th and 66th Batteries R.F.A. had all been either killed, wounded, or driven from their guns by infantry fire at close range, and the guns were deserted. About 500 yd. behind the guns was a donga, in which some of the few horses and drivers left alive were sheltered. The intervening space was swept with shell and rifle fire.

"Capt. Congreve, Rifle Brigade, who was in the donga, assisted to hook a team into a limber, went out and assisted to limber up a gun; being wounded he took shelter, but seeing Lieut. Roberts fall badly wounded he went out again and brought him in. Some idea of the nature of the fire may be gathered from the fact that Capt. Congreve was shot through the leg, through the toe of his boot, grazed on the elbow and shoulder, and his horse shot in three places.

"Lieut. Hon. F. Roberts, King's Royal Rifles, assisted Capt. Congreve. He was wounded in three places.

"Corpl. Nurse, R.F.A., 66th Battery, also assisted. I recommend the above three for the Victoria Cross.

"Dvrs. H. Taylor, Young, Petts, Rockall, Lucas, and Williams, all of the 66th Battery R.F.A., rode the teams; each team brought in a gun. I recommend all six for the medal for Distinguished Conduct in the Field. Shortly afterwards Capt. H. L. Reed, 7th Battery R.F.A., who had heard of the difficulty, brought down three teams from his battery to see if he could be of any use. He was wounded, as were five of the 13 men who rode with him; one was killed, his body was found on the field, and 13 out of 21 horses were killed before he got half-way to the guns, and he was obliged to retire.

"I recommend Capt. Reed for the Victoria Cross, and the following non-commissioned officers and men, 7th Battery R.F.A., for the medal for Distinguished Service in the Field: 86208 Corpl. A. Clark (wounded), 87652 Corpl. R. J. Money, 82210 Acting-Bombdr. J. H. Reeve, 28286 Dvr. C. J. Woodward, 22054 Dvr. William Robertson (wounded), 22061 Dvr. William Wright (wounded), 22051 Dvr. A. C. Hawkins, 26688 Dvr. John Patrick Iennox, 22094 Dvr. Albert Nugent (killed), 23294 Dvr. James Warden, 32067 Dvr. Arthur Felton (wounded), 83276 Dvr. Thomas Musgrove, 26523 Tmptr. William W. Ayles (wounded).

"I have differentiated in my recommendations, because I thought that a recommendation for the Victoria Cross required proof of initiative, something more, in fact, than mere obedience to orders, and for this reason I have not recommended Capt. Schofield, R.A., who was acting under orders, though I desire to record his conduct as most gallant."

LORD METHUEN'S ADVANCE.

Lord Methuen describes successively the battles of Belmont, Graspan, and Modder River. In the last-named he reports that from information he received he came to the conclusion that the entire force of the enemy had assembled at Spytfontein, and that he would not meet with any determined resistance on the Modder. Furthermore, he states in a footnote that all his information was to the effect that the Modder and Riet rivers were fordable anywhere—information which proved quite incorrect.

"We all believed," Lord Methuen says in another paragraph, "that the force in our front was fighting a retiring action, and had no idea that 8,000 Boers had been brought from Spytfontein to oppose us." In no case was it possible to turn the enemy's position by a wide detour. Lord Methuen started at four in the morning, and it was not until 10 minutes past eight that a sudden and very heavy fire announced that the enemy held the river in great strength, and perfectly concealed. Lord Methuen, it seems, received his flesh wound at half-past five in the afternoon, and then handed over the command to Major-Gen. Sir H. Colville. In concluding the descriptive report of the battle, Lord Methuen says:—

"Col. Hall (of the artillery) points out it would have been better that he should have known the point of attack, but the truth is that as no one can get on a horse with any safety within 2,000 yd. of the enemy orders cannot be conveyed; and personally, I am first to admit I was for most of the day in positions I had no right to be in because I could only see how the fight was progressing by going to the front."

It is noteworthy that Lord Methuen mentions for special praise about as many non-commissioned officers and men as he does commissioned officers. With some of his officers he does not appear to be wholly satisfied. For instance, he remarks that "Two companies Scots Guards fell back by order of a brigadier to a reservoir to secure the right flank, which, I think, was quite secured, as a matter of fact, by my mounted troops."

BELMONT.

From Lord Methuen's description of the battle of Belmont he states that the losses were no greater than were to be expected.

"To keep in extended order," he argues, "covering an enormous front, to get to the enemy's position at daybreak, saves you in the first instance from flanking fire, and in the second place from great losses in the plain. There is far too great risk of failure in making flank and front attacks in the face of a position such as lay before me at Belmont. The very first element of success is to keep touch between brigades from the first, nor is there any question of attacking the enemy in flank, as on horses he changes front in 15 minutes, as will be shown in my next fight. Shrapnel does not kill men in these kopjes, it only frightens; and I intend to get at my enemy."

It appears that in the battle of Belmont one battalion lost direction, and suffered heavy loss.

GRASPAN.

After describing the battle of Graspán, Lord Methuen says:—

"I found I had taken the whole Boer force in flank, and had entirely cut them off from their line of retreat. My guns played upon the masses of horsemen, but my few cavalry, dead beat, were powerless, and for the second time I yearned for a cavalry brigade and a horse artillery battery to let me reap the fruits of a hard-fought action."

THE TREATMENT OF THE WOUNDED.

Gen. Methuen says at the conclusion of his despatch:—

"I am glad to have been slightly wounded, because in no other way could I have learnt the care taken of the wounded, and there was nothing officer or private soldier required that was not provided at once, and the medical officers never tired in their endeavours to alleviate suffering."

THE VALUE OF SCOUTING.

In forwarding a report by Col. H. S. G. Miles on the action at Zoutspans Drift, which took place on Dec. 13, Gen. Buller says:—

"I suppose our officers will learn the value of scouting in time, but in spite of all one can say, up to this, our men seem to blunder into the middle of the enemy, and suffer accordingly."

BOER ATROCITIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you permit me to draw your attention to a few points connected with the war which appear to me to have been often exaggerated by a large proportion of the English press. A large number of stories in regard to Boer atrocities have appeared in different papers. It is true that some of them are authenticated descriptions of what has really taken place, but it is more than probable that many of them are untrue. The most common of these often contradictory statements are those in which the Boers have been described as in the habit of firing on ambulances in the field. Has it, however, always been possible to prove that this has been deliberately done? In the heat of an engagement the ambulances very often get mixed up with the combatants themselves, and if it is possible to distinguish one from the other it is doubtful whether such a distinction would in certain cases lead to a cessation of fire. At the battle of Colenso I saw some of our retreating troops on more than one occasion intermingled with their ambulances. The Boers continued firing on the retreating troops, and some of their shells undoubtedly went dangerously near the ambulances in question. It is, however, doubtful whether they saw the latter, and it is also an open question whether, if they did, they would have been justified in stopping their fire. If a similar case had occurred on the other side it would probably have been promptly seized upon as another example of the way in which the Boers protect themselves. As it was, however, the confusion was due to the sudden retirement of a portion of our force. Under these conditions, would it not be well for us to be careful how we accuse our enemies? It is a difficult thing at any time to get conclusive proofs of a preconceived intention to do wrong, but in war, as may be seen from the case I have quoted, it is harder still. The Boers have already proved themselves to be worthy of our respect in many ways, and whenever our wounded have fallen into their hands they appear to have been treated well. Then, in other instances, when some of our men have assisted wounded Boers they have been cordially thanked for their kindness. Under these conditions, would it not be well for us to try to get rid of much of that bitter feeling which at present is only fanned by sensational rumours in the press? The Boers must, of course, be beaten, and be beaten well. If, however, we wish to put an end to racial strife once the war has been brought to a close, it would be well for us to do what we can to prevent the use of unnecessary recriminations now.

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—Capt. Lord Sudley is about to leave England for South Africa in command of reinforcements for the composite regiment.

4th Dragoon Guards.—Capt. Morley, late of the regiment, has been selected for employment on remount duty in South Africa.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys).—Lieut. Conolly has resigned his appointment in the Egyptian Army and proceeds to join headquarters in South Africa.

4th Hussars.—Mr. Winston Churchill has been appointed to a commission in the Imperial Light Horse.

8th Hussars.—Headquarters and the remaining squadrons arrived at Aldershot on Thursday from Ireland and joined the 4th Cavalry Brigade on mobilisation. Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Le Gallais left England on Saturday last for South Africa on special service. Capt. Greathed, 4th Batn. Durham Light Infantry, has rejoined the regiment for duty in the present emergency.

12th Lancers.—Col. Wardrop, C.B., late of the regiment, has been granted a two years' extension as Military Attaché at Vienna, with effect from April 9.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The 59th Battery R.F.A. left Woolwich on Monday for Cahir, where it arrived on Tuesday and took over quarters.

The 91st Battery R.F.A. left Cahir on Monday for Aldershot, where it arrived on Tuesday and took over quarters.

Three new field batteries are at once to be formed at Shorncliffe from to-day, these being the 104th, 105th, and 106th. A new company of Garrison Artillery—the 30th—will be formed at Dover from Wednesday next.

Capt. M. C. P. Ward has joined the staff of the Intelligence Department at headquarters as Staff-Captain.

Capt. R. G. Merriman, D.S.O., has been appointed a temporary D.A.A.G. for Recruiting at the War Office.

Lieut. R. F. Johnson has arrived in South Africa from India to take up a R.G.A. command.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut. G. E. J. Durnford has been appointed Assistant-Instructor S.M.E., Chatham.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Major the Hon. G. Legh, 2nd Batn., is allowed to leave England for South Africa in charge of reinforcements.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. which mobilised at Lancaster on the 23rd inst. has been placed under orders to embark for South Africa about the 9th inst. The 4th (Militia) Batn. has arrived at the Cape in the Nile.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn., stationed at Portsmouth, is under orders to embark on Friday next for service in the Mediterranean. Lieut. Wood has resigned his appointment in the Chinese Regiment at Wei-Hai-Wei and proceeds to South Africa to take up the duties of Adjutant of the 2nd Batn.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—At church parade at Colchester on Sunday the 5th (Militia) Batn. were briefly addressed by Col. McCalmont, who remarked that a short time ago he told the men he might one day ask them to volunteer for active service. He now asked any men who were not willing to go to South Africa to fall out. There was not a movement in the ranks, the colonel remarking, "Just what I expected—not a single man." The 6th (Militia) Batn. arrived at Cape Town on Monday in the Umbria from Southampton.

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—Lieut.-Col. Mackenzie left Bombay on Sunday last in the Upada for South Africa to assume command of the 1st Batn. on promotion, vice Lieut.-Col. Watson, killed in action. A telegram from Pretoria states that Capt. Brett, 1st Batn., a prisoner of war, has now entirely recovered. Capt. A. M. Leslie, Reserve of Officers, has been selected for service at the dépôt, Bury St. Edmunds. Capt. the Hon. G. Cadogan, 4th (Militia)

Batn., A.D.C. to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, has been selected for special service in South Africa.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—Lieut.-Col. Bromfield, D.S.O., 2nd Batn., was unfortunately wounded and taken prisoner at Spion Kop, on the 24th ult. but we are glad to learn by last accounts that he, was being well cared for and was doing well.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—The 2nd Batn. arrived at Cape Town from Southampton on Saturday evening in the Britannic.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—The 2nd Batn. has arrived at Cape Town this week in the Bavarian from Southampton.

King's Own Scottish Borderers (25th).—The 1st Batn. arrived at Cape Town on the 26th ult. from Southampton in the Braemar Castle.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Major Sanders has been appointed second in command, vice Major Charley, who was killed in action at the battle of Colenso. Major Mackenzie is about to leave home to join headquarters in South Africa.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th) has arrived at Cape Town this week in the Bavarian from Southampton.

East Surrey Regiment (31st).—Capt. Ionides is about to leave the dépôt for service with the 2nd Batn. (70th) in South Africa.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th) was to have left Gibraltar yesterday in the Cephalonia for England, and on arrival on Tuesday next will proceed to Aldershot.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. at Pembroke Dock has been placed under orders to embark for South Africa.

Sherwood Foresters (45th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. arrived at Cape Town on Monday evening from England.

Royal Berkshire Regiment (49th) left Parkhurst on Sunday last and proceeded to Southampton, where it embarked in the Cephalonia for conveyance to Gibraltar. The battalion arrived on Thursday and has relieved the 1st Batn. South Staffordshire Regiment.

Essex Regiment (56th).—300 mounted infantry have been despatched to Natal from Burma mounted on Burmese ponies, 100 men being furnished by the 2nd Batn. West Riding and Essex Regiments, and Durham Light Infantry respectively. Major Cruickshank, Essex Regiment, is in command of the 300, and Capt. Copeman in command of the "Pompador" detachment, with Lieuts. Barlow and Stirling with him.

King's Royal Rifles (60th).—The 9th (Militia) Batn. has arrived at the Cape from Queenstown in the Nile.

North Staffordshire Regiment (64th).—Addressing the 4th (Militia) Batn. on parade in Newry Barracks on Sunday last, Col. Mirehouse asked those who were willing to serve in South Africa to hold up their right hand. All the men present, numbering 500, put up their hands. Col. Mirehouse thanked the battalion for this token of loyalty and promised to report the matter to the War Office.

Durham Light Infantry (68th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. arrived at Cape Town on Monday evening from England. The 4th (Militia) Batn., which arrived at Aldershot on embodiment, has volunteered for active service in South Africa. The men are a splendid body, mostly miners and iron workers.

Reviews.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY.

Under the title of The Imperial Russian Navy: its Past, Present, and Future (Thacker and Co.) Mr. Fred T. Jane has written a book, very full indeed of information, which may be regarded generally as an encyclopædia concerning its subject. Mr. Jane looks upon this country as having been "the nurse, doctor, schoolmaster, and foster-parent" of the Russian Navy. He is alluding to the experience Peter the Great gained in England, and to the service of many Englishmen in the Russian fleet during the reigns of Peter and his successor Catherine, among whom was the famous Admiral Greig. Those who know Admiral Bridge's book, "The Navy of Peter the Great," will not be surprised to discover how very large was the number of our countrymen who entered the Russian Service at that time. The grand Duke Alexander Michaelovitch, to whom Mr. Jane's book is dedicated, has helped him very largely in the preparation of his pages, which are distinguished by vigour and courage, and will be particularly welcome to naval students. The historical portion is somewhat brief, but it is sufficient for the purpose, and throws a good deal of light upon some events concerning which there is very little knowledge in this country. The author regards the battle of Sinope not as a massacre, but as having been justified by the exigencies of policy, and he describes it as a brilliantly conceived and executed surprise. Probably the Society of Friends will learn with surprise from Mr. Jane that their peace-loving embassy to the Czar Nicholas was at the root of the ingrained distrust of England which, he says, is still found in every member of the house of Romanoff! The view taken is that the Czar looked upon the mild-mannered gentlemen who visited him as officially representing the British Government, and, therefore, when England declared war he was naturally surprised. Hence, says Mr. Jane, an expression on the part of our Government of a desire for any understanding is regarded "as a danger signal that England meditates a war." He asserts that this curious belief is prevalent in Russia. There seems to be something inconsistent in his remark that the Russian ships, during the war, wisely kept inside their ports, when we find him immediately afterwards asserting that it was purely a matter of fortune that Prince Mentschikoff decided to fight on land. "Otherwise the transports must have been more or less annihilated. He cannot be free from the suspicion of having been filled with a desire to obtain military glory at the expense of sound strategy." Mr. Jane gives a very full account of the Russian Navy, describing the ships in historical sequence, and illustrating the chapters with many pictures, of which a number are taken from his book, "All the World's Fighting Ships." His account of the system of equipages for the fleet is extremely interesting and valuable. He was empowered to visit the Russian dockyards through the Grand Duke Alexander, and gives a full description of the slips upon which the ships are built. Owing to the climatic conditions they are very carefully housed in, and are quite important buildings. From the New Admiralty yard, he proceeded to Galernii Island, and was uncertain as to its ownership, but suspected that it belonged to a Franco-Russian company. Some doubt as to their real proprietorship also assailed him at the Baltic works, though he was led to believe the Russian Admiralty were the chief shareholders. Mr. Jane also visited the Cronstadt yard and some smaller establishments, and has much to say about them. Incidentally he offers the opinion that Port Arthur is rather a weakness than a strength for Russia. He does not give an impression of very great activity as prevailing in the Russian yards, and has some rather sarcastic remarks about the "insanity" shown in compiling comparative tables of warships, in which the Russian fleet is generally made to include several phantom vessels. Generally speaking, Mr. Jane gives a very pleasing account of the Russian officers, who, he says, are inspired by a simple devotion to duty without any thought of glory. In his general conclusions he tells us that the Russians firmly believe in masts and yards for training purposes, and will have none of "the silly modern fad." But the Russian sailor has short service and little sea-time, and he is not very intelligent, any more than he is personally very clean. The officers are drawn from a good class, but the engineers come from a lower grade, and are not any better than the locomotive engine drivers on shore. Russian officers are very keen in playing Mr. Jane's war game, and we gather from him that they are greatly interested in all questions concerning strategy and tactics. Some very interesting things are in his appendices to the book, especially the short biographies of Russian officers, and of many Englishmen and Scotchmen like Gordon, Greig, and Saunders who have served in the Russian fleet. We have said enough to show that Mr. Jane's book is valuable, and it is certainly very instructive. He has written with accurate knowledge of his subject, and has treated it with spirit, though he offers some opinions to which we cannot give our sanction.

TWO BOOKS ON FIGHTING.

How Soldiers Fight is the title of a book by F. Norreys Connell (James Bowden). The purpose which the author has endeavoured with much success to fulfil has been to represent, in a brief and popular way, the manner in which military tactics and character have grown. He approaches the subject historically, and very briefly traverses long periods, with generalisations which may not always be correct. He is, however, quite right in saying that the British soldier of to-day may even be superior to the old war dogs, while the British officer is not a whit short of his progenitors in personal gallantry, and is infinitely more deserving of the confidence of brave men. After this discussion, Mr. Connell proceeds to gossip in a very pleasant fashion about the duties of the staff and the characteristics of the various arms of the Service. He certainly knows how to write well, and he has written what should be very popular at a time when the public are a good deal interested in fighting.

Things I Have Seen in War, by Irving Montagu (Chatto and Windus), is a popular volume consisting of a number of chapters which have a little the air of having been collected. Whether that be so or not, they are pre-eminently readable. They carry us through the Russo-Turkish War to Plevna and the last stand of Osman, with many incidents and particulars of Turkish life. Indeed, Mr. Montagu's experience seems to have been very largely in Eastern Europe. He has the pen of a ready writer, but we have not a great opinion of the illustrations which he has added to the book.

The second volume has appeared of Mr. W. H. Fitchett's How England Saved Europe (Smith, Elder and Co.). It is really the story of the great war from 1793 to 1815, the subject of the present volume being "Nelson and the Struggle for the Sea." When the first volume appeared we expressed great admiration for the author's picturesque style of writing. He is something of an artist in words, and his impressionist sketches are based nearly always upon an adequate knowledge of facts. The second volume is just as good as the first, but we must be content to say of it that it embodies a vigorous survey of operations extending from the Peace of Lunéville to the Battle of Trafalgar, and more briefly to the year 1808. It is something of a hasty generalisation to say that in 1803-4 Napoleon sacrificed his fleet to the flotilla, though there is something of truth in the statement; but the fact is that Napoleon, though a great strategist, never truly understood the conditions underlying the exercise of sea power, and that he was completely out-manœuvred and never had any real chance of success. We are glad to see that the account of Trafalgar bears the impress of the late Admiral Colomb's recent discussion of the subject. No book could be better fitted than Mr. Fitchett's to place in the hands of boys, who will learn from it in a most pleasant way how England confronted the great projects of the French Republic and Empire.

We heartily welcome what may be described as an édition de luxe of the Almanach du Drapeau 1900 (Hachette et Cie.). There is nothing like this book in England. The amount of information and of interest embodied in its pages is not less than astonishing. The publishers say that the little volume contains 3,000,000 letters, 71 maps, and 1,930 pictures.

We have examined it with care, and are able to say that there is scarcely one of them that is not satisfactory. Everything that can interest the soldier is depicted, whether it be the portrait of a general, the character of a uniform, the details of a gun, or the form of a signal. But it is scarcely possible to give any idea of the extreme variety of matter crammed into the book. Not an inch of space is wasted, and there is scarcely an inch that fails to interest. The Almanach deals with the past and future of war, the glories of the French Army, the life and duties of the soldier in every branch of the Service, the various arms, the fleet, the system of training, discipline, military and naval science, geography, history, the war of 1870, mobilisation, fortress warfare, and other matters, and it does not neglect subjects of lighter interest, nor matters that may amuse the soldier or the seaman.

A VETERAN ON ARITHMETIC.

FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

"What to the logical Teutonic mind," said Major von Blutwitz, "does most surprising seem is that in matters military you English will not recognise that two and two must four inevitably make. As regards your Navy you see facts clearly enough, but so soon as the great principles regulating the efficiency for war of your Army claim attention it would seem as if some enchantment the whole nation into a fool's paradise betrays. Take now your deficiency in artillery. At this moment in a great crisis you have actually not enough guns for your Army in the field, and your arsenals are denuded. Observe the ineptitude, the want of conduct and foresight, which alone can have brought about such a situation. With whom lies the fault? With A shrieks one, with B cries another, with this department yells a third, with that howls a fourth; and I listening impartially to the clamour say not with one but with all, and with the mental habits of the nation at large the fallacy must be found. The English would not hear the truth, therefore by their officials, wise in their generation, has the truth not been told them.

"Reflect. Apart from your present troubles, what was the situation as regards this very point before the present contest surprised you? For your regular Army you had a force of field artillery calculated on a lower scale than the experience of war admits in any continental State. But what was the case as regards your Auxiliary forces of Militia, Volunteers, and Yeomanry? What provision was made for their needs in this vital matter of field and horse artillery? A few slow-moving batteries of position, and here and there some machine guns with the Volunteers and Yeomanry constituted all your supply.

"How different would have to-day been your position had the people of England really believed that infantry and cavalry are useless without field guns, and that this applies with double force to the case of troops which at the outset of a campaign must of necessity be less solid than the regular regiments. Of two things, one. Either it must have been supposed that some special interposition of Providence would in your case abrogate the ascertained conditions of warfare, or else you must have supposed that your Auxiliary forces would never really be required in the field, that the whole thing was in fact a comedy—a playing at soldiers. Somehow or other you would at any rate by no means allow that two and two inevitably make four.

"To your miserable deficiency in cavalry the same thing applies—and see how the matter works out in detail. Read Lord Methuen's despatch in which he bewails the fact that for want of a brigade of cavalry and some horse artillery he lost the fruits of the victory by your indomitable infantry achieved. And now, however, consider what would have been the fate of a Ministry which a year or two, or even a few months, back had resolutely told Parliament the truth in these matters and demanded the doubling of your field batteries and the necessary increase of your cavalry. They would not for a moment have been believed, because that in matters military two and two make four you English cannot understand."

THE INCREASE OF THE GERMAN NAVY.

THE Emperor William has declared that the future of Germany "lies upon the water." Those who have watched the development of naval policy in the Fatherland were not in any degree surprised by this utterance, now adopted as a watchword, nor are we by the presentation to the Reichstag of the new Navy Bill, which gives further practical expression to it and is to double the fleet. It was foreseen that when the German Emperor proclaimed the "Weltreich," and threw himself so enthusiastically into the "Welt-Politik," that he could not be satisfied without the possession of a great fleet. His enthusiastic temperament leads him to look back with a fervent admiration to the times of the Hanseatic League, when the ships of the German ports were upon almost every known sea. Until he came to the throne no German ruler of modern times had made any definite preparation for hostilities with the greater naval Powers. The work of internal consolidation, and the rise of Prussia to the hegemony among the German States, leading ultimately to the proclamation of the Empire in the Hôtel des Glaces at Versailles, were sufficient for the politicians of the last generation. So engrossed were Germans in internal affairs that they had no care for a greater outlook, and the colonies were coldly regarded. They did not understand the meaning of maritime power, and many a time their representatives in the Reichstag refused to grant the credits which the Government demanded. The Government itself designed a fleet which was purely serviceable for home defence. It consisted of a few heavy battleships and a number of small coast-defence armoured-clads, and the cruisers put in hand were very few and in no way commensurate with the commercial development of the country. But there has been a great movement to educate the people and to produce a large body of public opinion, so that it can no longer be said, as we said a few years ago, that Germany is blind to the importance of sea power. By the special order of the Emperor, Captain Mahan's book has been translated into German. It is in every German warship and has had a large sale in the country. The press has been inspired to advocate the creation of a fleet for foreign service, and the Aldeutsche-Verband and the Deutscher Flottenverein, or German Navy League, have been working very energetically to stimulate the public interest in naval concerns. At the present day the latter body numbers not less than 101,546 members, of whom it is significant to learn 9,590 have joined within a month. This large membership is independent of local affiliated bodies, so that directly and indirectly the members of the league may be estimated at more than a quarter of a million.

The new bill has met with the approval of the Federal Council. Its intention is to increase the battleships from nineteen to thirty-eight, the large cruisers from twelve to twenty, and the smaller vessels from thirty to forty-five. The non-recurring expenditure involved for construction and armament is estimated at 1,600,000,000 marks, with the addition of 261,000,000 marks for docks and harbours, while the ordinary expenditure will show an average increase of 5,400,000 marks per year. The addition which will be required for the personnel will be 33,746 men. The intention is to increase the ships in commission by a flagship and two squadrons, each of eight battleships, and to have two large and eight small cruisers with the fleet in home waters, and five of each class on foreign stations. In the reserve will be two additional battleships, and one large and two small cruisers. The Siegfried class of vessels will be replaced by eight battleships in due course, and two squadrons of battleships will be in commission and two in reserve. In regard to the building of the ships thus proposed to be employed, the bill states that during the next sixteen years three large and three small ships will ordinarily be placed on the stocks yearly, but no time is definitely fixed for the completion of the programme.

This proposed increase of the German fleet will have to be taken account of in this country, and must seriously occupy the attention of the Cabinet. If Germany doubles her fleet as is proposed, this country must make the response which is implied by the principle adopted that we shall be at least equal to any two navies that might come against us. In the view of the Kölnische Zeitung, if the new Navy Bill were submitted to a plébiscite it would meet with the absolutely enthusiastic assent of the majority of the people. We do not feel the smallest doubt that it will be accepted by the Legislature, and that within a measurable period the German fleet, as proposed to be created by the bill of 1897, will be doubled. In the memorandum which accompanies the new bill it is pointed out that the existing programme did not provide for the possibility of a naval war against a great naval Power, though we may point out that this limitation of scope was not alluded to when the bill of 1897 was presented. It appears now that the desire is to secure the execution of the original scheme of 1872 in the form of thoroughly modern ships, with the addition of a number of battleships sufficing for at least one double squadron. The fleet now existing and in hand might, in the words of the memorandum—

"Render a blockade difficult, especially in the first stage of a war, but could never prevent it."

... German mercantile shipping on every sea would be at the mercy of a superior adversary. An enemy's cruisers on the chief trade routes, in the Skagerak, in the English Channel, on the northern coasts of Scotland, in the Straits of Gibraltar, at the entrance to the Suez Canal, and at the Cape of Good Hope could make German navigation almost impossible. . . . It is not absolutely necessary that the German Navy should be as strong as that of the greatest naval Power. A great naval Power will in general not be able to concentrate its whole strength against us. But even if such a Power succeeded in meeting us in very superior strength, it would be so seriously weakened by having had to beat a strong German fleet that, in spite of its victory, its own position would not in the immediate sequel be secured by the possession of an adequate fleet."

The bill will doubtless be considered very carefully in the secret sittings of the parliamentary committee, and we shall hope later on to give a full account of it. The measure is presented with a series of appendices illustrating the increase of German foreign trade by 16 per cent. between 1896 and 1898 and of the development in the coasting trade and of the commerce at the ports, together with particulars of mercantile shipbuilding.

It would be neither right nor generous to deny that a great commercial Power like Germany is well justified in building a fleet. It is a right which we have exercised, with the result that we are the greatest naval Power in the world. This is a position from which we cannot allow ourselves to be displaced. There has not lately been that rapid progress in shipbuilding in this country which we should have liked to see, but the time has arrived when the Admiralty must consider the position, and in preparing the estimates for the coming financial year the great development of the German fleet cannot be overlooked. We were never able quite to credit the view officially put forward by the German Government that the Navy Bill of 1897 possessed a definitive character. It seemed strange at the time that there should be any limit placed to the expansion of the fleet, and although Admiral Tirpitz at the time denied the schemes of a boundless expansion which were popularly attributed to his department, we are not in any way surprised that a new wave of expansion is beginning. A few years ago Germany was a Power of small maritime importance. She has now discovered that her vast Army is useless for over-sea operations against a nation strong afloat; she sees her growing commerce a possible prey, and she has resolved to make the effort that is called for. If it were not that certain aggressive indications have marked the initiation of the new programme we should view the purposes with a not unfriendly eye. But in any case it would be, and is, the duty of the Government to shape its policy accordingly.

Naval Notes.

There have been a succession of rumours during the week to the effect that it is intended to mobilise a portion of the Reserve in the dockyards. The Daily Chronicle is responsible for the statement that at its meeting last Saturday the Cabinet devoted much discussion to the subject, and that it was settled "until further security to our shores is obtained by naval preparations the 8th Division is not to be despatched to South Africa." We cannot believe that this is correct, as to do so would be to assume that our Ministers consider a kind of interchangeable value for defence purposes to exist between a squadron of ships and a division of infantry, &c. It is true that some sort of ground is to be found in the Queen's Speech, where we find it stated that "at a time when several other nations are perfecting their naval preparations at the cost of increasing efforts and sacrifices, the solicitude with which you have provided for the efficiency of our Navy and of our coast defences will assuredly not be relaxed." There is an ambiguity about the latter phrase which is somewhat ominous at a time when there appears to be a strong disposition on the part of a hysterical section of the public to fall into a panic at the supposed deficiencies of our protection at home. It is pitiable to read the letters which well-meaning scaremongers have written to the papers and thoughtless editors have published. We would not have believed that there could be so many presumably intelligent people who have failed to appreciate, and benefit, by the writings of Mahan, Clarke, Thursfield, the late Admiral Colomb, and other writers on the influence of sea power. It is possible, of course, that to quiet the fears of the "old ladies" another flying squadron may be commissioned, but except for some such reason it is not at all clear why it should be necessary to hoist an additional pennant.

The Latona arrived at Portsmouth last Saturday from Bermuda with the paid-off crew of the Indefatigable. On the 19th of last month the Latona fell in with the barque Oxford, bound from Sapelo to Swansea with pitch pine. The Oxford, laden with timber, had encountered bad weather, her rudder posts being smashed by the heavy seas, and she was making a good deal of water. When the cruiser was sighted signals of distress were made, and Mr. Neilsen, the master, and his crew of fifteen hands were taken off by the Latona's boats. The Azores, the nearest land, being distant 900 miles, it was considered impracticable to tow the Oxford to port, so as soon as the safety of the crew had been provided for a working party was sent to set fire to the merchantman to prevent her from becoming a danger to navigation. The crew of the Oxford were landed at Portsmouth on the arrival of the Latona in port.

The trials of the Highflyer and Minerva having been concluded, it is to be hoped that the public will not be long left in doubt as to the result. It is reported that the former ship burned about 25 per cent. more fuel than did her sister, which may have been the case, and yet without any important bearing on the matter to be determined. These two ships are of the same displacement, 5,600 tons, but while the Scotch boilers of the Minerva are supposed to give a horse-power of 9,600 and a speed of 19.5 knots, the water-tube Belleville boilers of the Highflyer are nominally equal to 10,000 indicated horse-power, with natural draught only, giving a speed of 20.5 knots. The Highflyer is far and away the better ship in the way of guns, carrying eleven 6in. quick-firers to five of the Minerva, and, unless the official expectations are unrealised, in the way of steaming power also. She is to come home to make good her defects and to complete with stores before leaving for Bombay to take the place of the Eclipse, the flagship on that station.

The following additional officers have been landed in Cape Colony: Commander W. L. Grant, of the Doris; Lieutenant J. A. Fergusson, of the Barrosa; Surgeon T. T. Jeans, of the Monarch; Gunner James Canuon, of the Monarch; and Midshipmen George H. Lang and James Menzies, of the Doris.

A recent letter to the Times from Captain H. Pearson, R.N., throws interesting light upon the "right of search" as viewed by German naval officers at the time of the civil war in Samoa. Captain Pearson was at Samoa when a German warship sent an armed boat's crew on board a British mail steamer to rifle the cargo in search of contraband goods. In that instance the cargo consisted chiefly of tinned meats, and the Germans ran their bayonets through the tins. This action was protested against by the then captain of the Royalist, but his protest was ineffectual. A few weeks later, when Captain Kane, of the Calliope, was the senior naval officer in the port, the Germans again attempted to exercise the "right of search," but were prevented by Captain Kane. He sent a party of armed seamen on board the British mail steamer with orders to resist the search. Now these facts are exceedingly interesting at the present time when Germany has made a successful demand for compensation upon the British Government for the detention of the Bundesrath. The native kings of Samoa were at war, and Germany had sided with one party. Her naval officers, it will be seen, claimed the right under international law to prevent a British ship from landing a cargo of provisions. In the one case this supposed right was admitted under protest; in the second it was firmly resisted by Captain Kane. Technically, Germany was not even at war. How, then, could her officers sequester or destroy a British cargo? It is quite certain again that these incidents did not lead to a demand for compensation on the part of the British Government. Thus the case proves nothing, but it is very instructive and suggestive.

The liability of foodstuffs, carried by neutral vessels, to seizure by the belligerent Powers is in effect an international question of the greatest delicacy. A great deal of rubbish has been printed on this subject in the continental press, there being no ground for the assertion of many German papers that Great Britain arrogates to herself the right of search without restriction. Our policy has been considerably modified since the Napoleonic Wars, and there is an obvious disposition on the part of the present Government to adopt no action that may interrupt our own food supplies should we be forced in war with a maritime coalition. With this cautious attitude many naval officers in this country will be wholly out of sympathy; and many critics, naval and civilian, will agree that the probable action of a strong maritime coalition against England would be the treatment of all foodstuffs as contraband. There is little room for doubt, however, that such a decision would be illegal as international law stands at present, except in special cases. The existing law of nations on the point has been very clearly stated by Mr. Thomas Barclay in a letter to the Times. We can do no more than indicate his conclusions here. Basing his conclusion upon the international conference of 1896, Mr. Barclay states in effect that foodstuffs are held liable to sequestration (not to forfeiture) provided the government that sequesters be willing to pay compensation. This principle strikes at the very root of Great Britain's ancient claims, and is in accord with those of the Declaration of Paris. The matter is gravely complicated in this instance by the neutrality of Delagoa Bay, and it is likely that the most eminent jurists will be found to differ in their judgment.

Five of the twelve thirty-knot destroyers recently ordered are to be attached to the Devonport Command. These are the Falcon and Ostrich, building at Glasgow; the Lively and Sprightly, under construction at Birkenhead; and the Vixen, now on the slips at Barrow-in-Furness. The destroyers are to be delivered at the end of this year. Of the destroyers previously ordered, the Fervent and Zephyr, twenty-seven-knot vessels, building at Paisley; the Viper, 35½-knot vessel, building at Newcastle-on-Tyne; and the Express, thirty-three-knot vessel, to be launched at Birkenhead, are to be delivered at Devonport before July. The remainder of the thirty-knot boats will go to Portsmouth and Chatham, and in time will form part of the instructional flotilla at those ports.

From Messrs. H. Graves and Co. we have received an advance proof impression of their new naval publication, "The Handy Man," by Mr. R. Caton Woodville, a companion to that artist's drawing "The Absent-Minded Beggar." The drawing is a capital one and has been reproduced in the highest style of photo-mezzotint by R. W. Hester. The painting is that of a gunner's mate, who is pointing out the effect of a shell from a 4.7in. gun, but from the dress of the bluejacket it is not clear whether it is intended that the incident should be located in South Africa or not. The technical points of the drawing, we are told, have been passed by "an informal committee of some half-a-dozen admirals and captains." Two hundred treble remarqué proofs are to be published, signed by Rudyard Kipling and R. Caton Woodville, although why Mr. Harold Begbie's name does not appear is not explained. The remarqués consist of a midshipman with, on his right and left respectively, the heads of Captain Percy Scott and Captain Lambton.

On the arrival of the General Steam Navigation's Company's steamer Capulet at Great Yarmouth the other day, she reported having picked up at sea eight of the crew of the Mallard, destroyer, who were found adrift in a small boat. The men left their vessel to land mails at Southend, when a strong wind and a heavy sea carried them away and half filled the boat with water. The oars and rudder were lost, and the boat drifted for two hours and a half until she was picked up.

Naval Personal.

Vice-Admiral Sir Compton E. Domville, Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves, has been selected to relieve Vice Admiral Sir E. H. Seymour as Commander-in-Chief of the China Station, and will hoist his flag in the Glory, now being prepared at Portsmouth, which battleship is to relieve the Centurion in the Far East. Sir Compton's selection indicates the appreciation by the Admiralty of his services as second in command of the Mediterranean fleet as well as in his present appointment. As he is comparatively young and has displayed marked ability as a flag-officer the China Command will undoubtedly be in desirable hands.

Vice-Admiral Sir H. H. Rawson, commanding the Channel fleet, is to rendezvous the vessels under his orders now at the home ports off the Eddystone on Monday, and proceed to Bantry Bay for a fortnight's exercises, harbour drills, and other evolutions. He will afterwards proceed with the vessels to the coast of Spain.

Rear-Admiral E. Neville Rolfe presides on Tuesday at the Founders' Day dinner of the Royal Naval Club, 1765-85, to be held at the Hôtel Métropole.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford left London on Thursday for Malta, via Genoa, to join the Mediterranean fleet.

Rear-Admiral Day H. Bosanquet, Commander-in-Chief of the East India Station, left Trincomalee on Saturday last for Bombay in his flagship, the Eclipse.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, of the Europa, left Malta on Tuesday last with the paid-off crew of the Ramillies for Portsmouth.

Captain Frank Finnis, of the Amphion, pays off that cruiser at Devonport on the 13th inst.

Captain Henry C. Reynolds commissions the Pique on the 15th inst. for the China Station.

Captain Sir Alfred Jephson, whose health necessitated his departure to the South of France last autumn, has moved from Monte Carlo to Cannes.

Captain William Wilson, of the Anson, paid off that battleship at Devonport on Tuesday last.

Captains A. L. Winsloe, of the Niobe, and H. C. B. Hulbert, of the Pelorus, detached from the Channel fleet to South Africa, are to return at an early date to Devonport, where their respective commands will be refitted and leave given to their crews.

Captain R. C. Prothero, of the Doris, who was wounded at Graspán in December last, has sufficiently recovered to admit of his return to the flagship.

Captain L. E. Wintz, of the Furious, now at Las Palmas on patrol duty, returns to Chatham to refit that cruiser and give leave to his ship's company, on being relieved by Captain A. W. E. Prothero, of the Arrogant.

Captain Sir Alexander Milne, Bart., of the Venus, arrived last week at Genoa to await Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, who probably embarked yesterday for Malta to take up his appointment as second in command of the Mediterranean fleet.

Captain E. P. Jones, of the Forte, commanding the naval brigade in northern Natal, is highly commended by General Sir Redvers Buller in his despatches for the manner in which he fought his guns and silenced every one of the enemy's that could be located at Colenso on December 15 last.

Captain R. B. Farquhar, of the Nymph, pays off that sloop at Portsmouth on Monday next.

Commander F. S. Miller arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last in the P. and O. steamer Victoria from the St. George at Gibraltar.

Commander Oliver Young, retired, M.P. for Wokingham (East Berks), in speaking at the Constitutional Club at Maidenhead on Monday last, stated that if war rendered necessary a general mobilisation of our fleet he would volunteer, and should not hesitate to resign his seat in the Legislature to serve in the Royal Navy.

Commander the Hon. H. A. Stanhope, of the Beagle, left Las Palmas on Tuesday last for Devonport to pay off that sloop.

Commander R. P. Cochran, of the Phoenix, having served three years abroad, will be relieved when that vessel is paid off at Hong Kong and recommissioned.

Lieut.-Commander E. G. W. Davey, of the Speedy, left Sheerness on Saturday for the Mediterranean to relieve the Hussar.

Lieutenant J. A. Fergusson, of the Barrosa, has proceeded to the front from East London with a naval detachment.

Lieutenant A. E. Acheson, invalided from the Furious at Las Palmas, arrived at Plymouth on Saturday last in the Castle Company's steamer Arundel Castle.

Lieutenant F. C. A. Ogilvy and Mr. Joseph Wright, of the Terrible, serving in Captain E. P. Jones's naval brigade in Natal, took part in the action at Colenso on December 15 last, and are mentioned in despatches by General Sir Redvers Buller for particularly rendering excellent service on that occasion. When the oxen teams of their guns had either stampeded or were killed these officers by dint of hard work got the guns and ammunition out of range of the enemy's fire.

Lieutenant C. S. Smith, retired, H.M. Consul at Bilbao, has been appointed Consul-General at Odessa. He commenced his consular career in 1883, and after seventeen years' service, and at the age of forty-two, has the good fortune to secure one of the principal appointments in that department. We hope for his further progress in the diplomatic service.

Lieutenant Douglas E. R. Brownrigg, senior of the Astræa in the Mediterranean, succeeds to a baronetcy by the death of his father, Sir Henry Moore Brownrigg, of White Waltham, Maidenhead.

Lieutenant W. H. Cowan, D.S.O., commanding the gunboat flotilla on the Nile, accompanied the expedition as staff-officer against the Khalifa in November last. The Sirdar, Colonel Sir R. Wingate, in his despatches speaks of the valuable services rendered by Lieutenant Cowan, and that by his zeal and energy he afforded the Sirdar much assistance during the operations.

Lieutenant H. L. H. Fell was Commandant at Fachi Shoya during the operations against the Khalifa, and the Sirdar states that he carried out his duties to his (the Sirdar's) satisfaction. In our issue of December 30 last we referred to the gallantry of Lieutenant Fell in saving the life of a native who had fallen overboard from a gunboat in the Nile, and for which the bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society was awarded.

Lieutenant H. Escombe, who was serving with Lieutenant Fell, is also mentioned by the Sirdar for ably assisting him in his duties at Fachi Shoya.

Lieutenant Douglas F. Robinson, late R.N., has been appointed Captain 6th (Militia) Batn. Lancashire Fusiliers.

Lieutenant George Plunkett England, junior of the Terrible, commands the 4.7in. gun with which the Colenso bridge was successfully destroyed. The manner in which he and his gun's crew worked at the battle of Colenso is specially mentioned in the reports of the affair. It appears that when Lieutenant England reported the fact that the bridge was blown up to General Clery and Captain Jones, those officers could hardly believe it at first as it was $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant. General Clery thanked him and his gun's crew for their splendid work.

It has been pointed out to us that in referring to the circumstance that Staff-Captain H. E. Wood had declined the appointment of Staff-Captain at Devonport Dockyard we may inadvertently have misled some of our readers. We should have quoted as his reason for so doing the statement which we made in our issue of December 9 last that he was obliged to forego the advantage then offered him in consequence of ill-health. We are glad to have been able to correct the error, and feel sure that Captain Wood himself will understand that it was merely the result of an oversight.

Sub-Lieutenant W. B. W. Grubb, of the Majestic, has been promoted Lieutenant after eighteen months' service in the junior rank, under Clause 9 of the Educational Regulations for Acting Sub-Lieutenants. But for a 2nd-Class certificate in gunnery his promotion would have come six months earlier. At the same time he deserves the congratulations of his brother officers as being included in the alumni of the Royal Naval College.

Fleet-Paymaster C. P. Penny has been allowed to retire in consequence of ill-health.

Captain F. Edwards, R.M.L.I., embarked in the Cunard steamship Cephalonia on Saturday last for Gibraltar to take up his appointment as Superintendent of Gymnasium.

Lieutenant J. A. M. A. Clark, R.M.L.I., Assistant-Instructor of Musketry, Plymouth Division, and Lieutenant F. A. Nelson, R.M.L.I., recently employed at the general dépôt, Devonport, are about to proceed to South Africa.

Captain G. A. Cox, R.M.L.I., undertakes the duties of Camp Adjutant at Fort Tregantle, near Plymouth, in place of Lieutenant J. A. M. A. Clark, R.M.L.I., ordered to South Africa.

Navy Foreign.

The scheme of national and colonial defence, which has been long under deliberation in France, has now taken shape after having been discussed in detail by the Cabinet. As our readers will be aware the group of measures now presented to the Legislature is the outcome of the scheme of M. Lockroy, now revived and enlarged in scope, and in view of the situation in South Africa and the new German programme we have little doubt that the proposals will be adopted. The gross outlay will be something like £30,000,000, and M. Caillaux hopes to distribute the huge sum over a period of seven years. The bill for the improvement of coast defences, which involves an expenditure of 140,000,000f., provides for the work to be carried out in the forts and arsenals to enable them to meet the requirements of the fleet, as it will be after the completion of the new ship-building programme. These works include jetties, graving docks, electric lighting, water supply, magazines and barracks, and other improvements. Among other things, the measure provides for the transformation of Bizerta into a first-class port and arsenal, the creation of dockyards at Saigon and Dakar, and the defence of Mers-el-Kebir and Corsica. The shipbuilding programme provides for the laying down, beginning this year, of six battleships, five armoured cruisers, twenty-eight destroyers, 112 torpedo-boats, and twenty-six submarine or submersible boats; altogether 177 new vessels. The reorganised fleet will consist of twenty-eight battleships, or four squadrons of six, with one in reserve for each squadron. There will be twenty-four first-class cruisers, divided as a rule into eight divisions, but subject to the exigencies of special service. The smaller vessels of the new fleet will be fifty-two destroyers, 263 torpedo-boats, and thirty-eight submarine boats. The 177 vessels still to be built will cost altogether 476,136,000f., to which must be added a sum of 235,000,000f. for the completion of vessels on the stocks on January 1 last. The total expenditure will amount to 711,500,000f. The new ships are expected to be all completed by 1907, but it is anticipated that two of the six ironclads, three of the six cruisers, twenty of the twenty-eight destroyers, seventy-six of the 112 torpedo-boats, and all the submarine boats will be ready for sea for 1905. The constructions already in hand on January 1 will be finished by 1903.

Many difficulties attend the increase of the Italian fleet, and while General Tarditi, owing to a difference with General Pelloux upon financial questions, has resigned the portfolio of war, the Minister of Marine is also confronted with complications. Just as in France, the battle of types of ships is going on. We gave recently an account of the general proposals as to the constitution of the fleet. Now Signor Vittorio Cuniberti, who was one of the first to introduce liquid fuel in warships, has presented his project for the building of battleships of medium size. They are not to exceed 8,000 tons, and to possess great speed and coal capacity with sufficient armouring, and are to carry not less than twelve 5in. guns, twelve 3in., and twelve 1.8in., all quick-firers. The horse-power would be 19,000 and the range with liquid fuel would be 15,000 miles at an economical speed. Signor Cuniberti believes that two such vessels, each of about half the size of the Majestic, would be much more powerful than the single ship either for defence or offence. Many writers in Italy support his views, and, however, opposed very strongly by the Admiralty, the well-known naval writer, and by other naval men who hold that vessels of 8,000 tons, however well armed and protected, could not compete with the more powerful ships built abroad. This was exactly the line of argument taken by Admiral Gervais when some time ago the question of moderate displacements was discussed in France.

In relation to the intended increase of the German fleet, the Navy League in Berlin is displaying the greatest activity, and Professors Delbruck, Sering, Schmöler, and others, who have been standing aloof from the league, have now joined it. There has been a well-attended meeting at Munich to protest against the assertions of North German papers that South German States, and especially Bavaria, are opposed to the Government proposals. The Americans appear to be viewing with a good deal of attention the naval movement in progress in Germany, though there is so far no disposition on the part of the Navy Department to change its building programme, which authorises the building of twenty-one ships for the fleet, in addition to those already existing.

Some ideas in regard to the Russian Navy have lately been expressed in an interview published in the Rossya of St. Petersburg by General Baranoff, whose name was prominent in the Turkish War. The general's opinion appears to be that the possession of battleships is more of a danger than a salvation to Russia. "We must at sea be not in front of our enemy but behind his back, and for this we must have a fleet of swift cruisers. If instead of armoured ships, she would for a long time secure the power of doing the greatest possible damage to her maritime enemies with the least possible injury to herself, thereby approaching a solution of the problem which modern generals and admirals regard as the most important in warfare." We do not, however, discover that these military views are reflected in the building operations of the Russian Government.

The Russians have lately been very unfortunate with their ships at sea. It was found quite impossible to raise the Gangut, which foundered off the coast of Finland, though a great sum was expended upon the attempt. The General Admiral Apraxine lies still, we believe, in a position of some danger upon the rock upon which she lately grounded at Hogland in the Gulf of Finland. The most recent addition to the list of mishaps is the case of the new battleship Poltava, which ran ashore on the 16th inst. near Libau and was in a position of some danger, though she was successfully floated and anchored at the port. There was a mishap also lately in the harbour at Odessa, where the auxiliary cruiser Vornesh came into collision with the Moskva of the same fleet. The injured vessel had to be put in hand for repair.

At the port of Cherbourg two new submarine boats of the Morse class are to be put in hand. This type seems to have satisfied the French Admiralty, though it is recognised as possessing only local value. The trials of the Narval are being continued and are likely to last a long time. There is yet no certainty that this submersible type will turn out satisfactorily. At Cherbourg also one of the new armoured cruisers proposed in the new estimates is expected to be put in hand. At Toulon the squadron will remain for some time with the view of economising the expenditure upon coal. The Gaulois and Charlemagne have joined the squadron from Brest, and on their way put in at Marseilles in order to make a trial of rapid coaling which is said to have been very successful.

MARINE OFFICERS' GRIEVANCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."
SIR,—As a retired officer of the Royal Marines I have been much interested to find in your issue of the 13th ult. no less than three references to this gallant corps. Will you allow me to make a few remarks on these references, taking them in the following order:—

(1) The Royal Marines in 1899.—This record for the year is excellent reading, and no one who has either served in or been associated with the corps can but rejoice to see the exceedingly high standard which officers and men have reached in the past year, and it must, I think, be clear to the British public that in the 18,500 officers and men who form the two branches of the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry they have a sterling reserve of force to fall back upon whether for sea or land service. It appears almost without doubt that this high efficiency can but be due to the officers of the corps and to the immense esprit de corps that animates all ranks.

(2) The Use and Misuse of Marines.—The letter of Sir John Colomb which contains the contention that marines should be used in their legitimate "land training" in more numbers in the present war under their own officers seems perfectly sound, for if so many bluejackets can be spared from Her Majesty's ships surely Marines can be spared too. Bluejackets are excellent gunners and might be employed in this land duty, but to use them as infantry in preference to the marines seems to me to throw away the excellent courses of infantry, musketry, and gunnery the marine goes through under his own officers at headquarters. And if gunners are wanted surely the Marine Artillery are as good as the bluejacket, to judge by the quarterly competitions. Why naval officers should command marines on board ship and on shore, and the marine officer not command bluejackets on board ship and on shore, is one of those anomalies one cannot understand, seeing that the Navy do not mind the regular officer commanding them on shore.

(3) The Grievances of Marine Officers.—It is pleasant to think that such a strong champion of the corps as your highly esteemed journal has always been should admit the grievances of the officers of the marines, as regards their non-employment in legitimate duties, though you argue that the benefit of the State in any remedy that may be suggested should come before the remedy of the marine officers' grievances. Surely it is to the benefit of the State to have this grievance of employment and command set at rest once for all, and, though you say "there is no future for them seawards," surely it is here that the remedy should be applied. Give the marine officer on board a man-of-war his proper duties of command and utility, and I am sure the question whether the marine officer commands the bluejacket or marine, or the naval officer commands the marine or bluejacket, once set at rest would remove a very long-standing grievance. The marine officer would then be told off to his share in the duties of the man-of-war as is the marine himself. If a naval brigade were landed, let the marine officer be in command, if entitled to it, just as much as the present naval brigades landed for service in the war come under the military officers' command. Give the marine officer his status with the naval officer in all things military, and put him in the same position as the regular officer is placed, and the friendship that has existed for so many years will be still further cemented. The alternative, unless the corps is to be disbanded, would be to utilise the corps, now 18,500 strong, as a reserve to the Navy, by letting properly trained battalions under their own officers occupy coaling stations and embarking the men by detachments for gunnery duties, very much as is done in the Reserve Squadron with the present Naval Reserve. This could be carried out in each station, and would supply a great reserve of force to the admiral on the station. It would appear that if the War Office needs overhauling by a strong organiser, so does the Admiralty, to get rid of the intense amount of conservatism that exists and to make all the branches of the Service take their proper position in the work of the Navy in these modern times, instead of having a service teeming with grievances in every branch and made unpopular to those serving in it.

I hope I may remark upon two expressions in your article which seem to want some explanation. You say, "It is a fact to be taken into consideration also that the marine himself, whether of the artillery or infantry, is by no means so eager to be bossed by his officer as his officer is to have the bossing of him." I read this with feelings of astonishment, as I cannot conceive that is the true feeling of the corps, nor could the writer of the article have knowledge of the great esprit de corps that exists, unless this latter feeling has been undermined by too much service on board ship. Then you say, "It is by no means certain either that in a tight place the marines would not prefer to be led by sea officers, even if they were only midshipmen." I have never heard such an aspersion cast upon the officers of the corps by the rank and file. If such a feeling could be possible, then it is only common sense to say that the sooner this fine corps, with all its glorious traditions, is separated from duties which generate such a feeling, or cause such a remark to be made, the better it will be for the State. In conclusion, as regards the non-employment of the corps of Royal Marines in the South African war in its legitimate duty of land training, I trust I may quote Lord St. Vincent's well-known remark, "If ever the hour of real danger should come to England, the Marines will be found the country's sheet-anchor." Possibly the Government and the present Board of the Admiralty have this remark in their mind, and really appraise the corps at its proper worth, and prefer to know they have this strong and loyal reserve in hand under its own officers to fall back upon.

RECTA BREVIORA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—With reference to the intended agitation for placing the marines under the War Office, can you find space for the following extract from the special correspondence of the Globe:—

"Sir John Colomb seized hold of the wrong end of the stick in his letters to the Times about the employment of marine officers with the naval brigade. He was in error about the Terrible's marines and officers. The latter were recalled from the Kimberley Relief Force, or rather from the border of the Orange Free State, because their ship was ordered to Durban and they were wanted in Natal, so that Sir John Colomb's opinion that they were 'dancing with rage' on board the Terrible is due to his frantic zeal for the employment of marine officers, and has no justification by the facts of the case. The object of landing the combination of bluejackets and marines as a whole naval brigade or 'unit' was that the marines should form, as infantry, an escort or covering party for the seamen who are acting as artillerymen. The marine officers are carrying out their own particular duties at the front, and are not interfered with in the charge of their men. Only a little tact and mutual consideration are needed for the smooth conduct of affairs when two different classes of people are brigaded together, and there is no reason for any difference on shore any more than when marines are embarked on board ship."

It seems to me that it shows that however much Sir John Colomb's efforts may be appreciated at home, they have not met with unqualified approval at the Cape. I am old enough to remember a previous agitation for the same purpose, and that failed as I believe this will. The result of any such change as is contemplated cannot but be detrimental to the public interest. A force cannot act in two capacities at the same time. The marines cannot, for example, be at once a reserve for the fleet and a garrison for the coaling stations. It must be one thing or the other, or there must be loss of efficiency. The Admiralty of that day made a great mistake when they permitted the force to be used as it was in the Soudan. By so doing the Navy was weakened to an extent which no mere landing of a small body of seamen and marines as a naval brigade could effect. As a soldier I have a high appreciation of the Royal Marines, and I trust no step will be taken which will impair its effectiveness as an integral part of the Navy.

A MILITARY OFFICER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In reference to the above it would seem to me that P. M. P. T., whose letter appears in your issue of last Saturday, is quite right when he says that the time "is ripe for the consideration of a scheme for the reorganisation of the corps." He also indicates the right direction that such a reorganisation should take, namely, that afloat marines should be officered by naval officers, and there need be no "loss of soldierlike appearance in the marines as a consequence," for the depôts can still remain in charge of military officers, specially selected for instructional purposes from the Royal Artillery, for drill purposes from infantry regiments. Men enlisting for the marines would, as now, receive military instruction prior to going afloat, and could return to the depôts for a period of military training after a commission. Naval officers to command marines would be officers selected and qualifying for the duty as they now do for torpedo and gunnery work, and they would naturally be landed for naval brigade work in preference to officers not so qualified.

NAVY.

Lieut.-Col. W. H. Wells, R.M.L.I.—Lieut.-Col. William Henry Wells, R.M.L.I., died at 94 North-side, Clapham Common, on the 24th ult. at the age of 57. He joined the Chatham Division as a 2nd Lieutenant in December, 1859; became Captain July 20, 1877; Major May 29, 1882; Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel Dec. 23, 1887; and retired in February, 1889.

ARMY.

Major-Gen. G. G. Cunliffe.—Major-Gen. George Gordon Cunliffe died at The Lodge, Bloxworth, Dorsetshire, on the 29th ult., aged 70. He joined the Army March 20, 1847; became Captain Oct. 26, 1860; Major March 20, 1867; Lieutenant-Colonel March 20, 1873; Colonel March 20, 1878; and retired with the honorary rank of Major-General Sept. 23, 1883. He served as a Volunteer in the Nynne Tal Militia, raised for the protection of that place from June 3 to Dec. 26, 1857, and assisted in the surprise and defeat of a body of rebels belonging to Khan Bahadur Khan that had occupied Huldwaree; commanded a detachment of the Kemaon Levy at the action of Churpoorah and a portion of a field force at the action of Surpoorah, succeeding to the command of the force on Capt. S. Brown being severely wounded (charger disabled by sword cuts—thanked by the Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief for gallant conduct, medal).

Lieut.-Col. R. G. Buchanan-Riddell.—Lieut.-Col. Robert George Buchanan-Riddell, 3rd Batn. King's Royal Rifles, was killed in action in the operations for the relief of Ladysmith on the 24th ult. Col. Buchanan-Riddell was a son of the late Rev. Canon John Charles Buchanan-Riddell, rector of Harrietsham, Kent, by his marriage with Frances Sophia, daughter of Mr. J. S. Cholmondeley, a nephew of Sir Walter Buchanan-Riddell, 10th baronet and brother of Sir John Walter Buchanan-Riddell, the present baronet, and of Major Henry Edward Buchanan-Riddell, also of the King's Royal Rifle Corps, who was severely wounded at Ladysmith on Oct. 30 last. He was born on Sept. 15, 1854, and joined the King's Royal Rifle Corps as Lieutenant from the West Kent Militia on Nov. 20, 1875; was Instructor of Musketry to the battalion from Nov. 6, 1878, to March 31, 1883; and in 1881 took part in the Boer War in the Transvaal. Gazetted a Captain Sept. 9, 1884, he was Adjutant of the 4th West London R.V. from May, 1890, to May, 1895; obtained his Majority June 10, 1892; and was gazetted Lieutenant-Colonel Dec. 29, 1898.

Lieut.-Col. C. M. Browne.—Lieut.-Col. Charles Michael Browne, retired list, Bombay Infantry, died at Link House, Westward Ho, North Devon, on the 24th ult., aged 57. He joined the Army June 8, 1861; became Captain Feb. 4, 1871; Major June 8, 1881; and Lieutenant-Colonel June 8, 1887.

Major H. H. Massy.—Major Hampden Henry Massy, R.E., was killed on the 24th ult. at Spearman's Camp, Natal. He was born Aug. 11, 1858, and joined the corps of Royal Engineers Oct. 9, 1877. He became Captain May 26, 1888, and Major Aug. 6, 1896. He left Aldershot recently in command of the 17th Field Company.

Major G. D. King-Harman.—Major George Douglas King-Harman, retired, late of the Queen's, died on the 25th ult., aged 54. He was fourth son of the Hon. L. H. King-Harman, of New Castle, Ballymahon, and Rockingham, Ireland.

Major A. J. J. Ross.—Major Archibald John Joseph Ross, 2nd Batn. King's Own Regiment, was killed in action at Spion Kop on the 24th ult. Born Feb. 9, 1859, he joined the 4th Regiment as 2nd Lieutenant May 11, 1878; became Lieutenant March 6, 1880; Captain March 24, 1886; and Major May 2, 1894. He was an Adjutant of Volunteers 1887-92.

Major A. O. White.—Major Arthur Ogilvie White, retired list, late of the Scottish Rifles, died at 23 Drummond-place, Edinburgh, on the 28th ult., aged 41. He joined the Army May 11, 1878; became Lieutenant Jan. 7, 1880; Captain June 23, 1886; Major Oct. 26, 1898; and retired at the beginning of last year on retired pay. From Nov. 1, 1895, up to the time of his retirement he was Adjutant of the 3rd Batn. Scottish Rifles. He served with the 90th Light Infantry in the Zulu war of 1879, and was present at Zungen Nek, Kambula, and Ulundi.

Major S. P. Strong.—Major S. P. Strong, 2nd Batn. Scottish Rifles, who was reported wounded in the operations for the relief of Ladysmith, was stated in a telegram from Sir Redvers Buller received at the War Office on Monday night to have died of his wounds. He joined the Army as 2nd Lieutenant in the 90th Light Infantry on Jan. 30, 1878; obtained his company in September 1883, and Majority Oct. 16, 1892, becoming second in command Dec. 22, 1897. He served with the 90th in the Gaika War, including the operations in the Perie Bush; and also in the Zulu War of 1879, when he took part in the action at Zungen Nek, the engagement at Kam-

THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.

[WITH COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.]

The Honourable Artillery Company, which is now much in the public mind, has a history different from that of any other corps in the kingdom. It has always been identified with the patriotic and military spirit of the City of London, and in sending out to South Africa the contingent which has accompanied the City of London Imperial Volunteers it maintains in force the traditions with which it began. The history of the company may, indeed, be traced to the mediæval bowmen of the city, many of whom served in the wars, and whose successors were incorporated under the style of the Fraternity or Guild of St. George in 1537. At the same time the Fraternity of Artillery in Great and Small Ordnance—a company of "Gunners of the Tower"—was formed, and the two corps continued to use the same ground in the Artillery Garden, a matter that afterwards led to disputes between them. In Captain Raikes's excellent history of the Honourable Artillery Company the confused proceedings of the time are elucidated. So grievous became the disputes that Charles I. addressed a letter to the "Alderman President of the company exercising arms in the Artillery Garden" and its members, urging them not to be hasty in disbanding the corps, for, he said, "You are not only become ready and skilful in the knowledge and use of arms and military discipline, but from thence, as from a fruitful nursery, all the trained bands of our City of London and divers of the companies of the counties adjoining have been supplied with fit and able leaders and officers, whereby our service has received much advantage and the kingdom in general a very great benefit." The military zeal was extraordinary at the time, and according to Blackwell must have equalled that which we now see. The company, he says, attained great proficiency in the use of arms, and it was held to be a most laudable exercise for diversion in use and practice among the citizens, who had an universal taste for, and pleasure in, military achievements or exercises, "so that not to be a complete soldier was not to be a man of note fit for the best company and conversation." The company became an example to the country and its popularity grew, and in 1641 the Prince of Wales (afterwards Charles II.), Charles Count Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, and James Duke of York (afterwards James II.), became members. Since that time either the King or the Prince of Wales has almost always held command of the company under the old title of captain-general.

During the Civil War elections to the company were partially suspended, but it supplied officers to the trained bands which fought for the Parliament, while six regiments of auxiliaries were raised. The country trained bands were disbanded in 1663, but those of London were retained until 1794, when they were changed into Militia. The Artillery Company itself continued to assemble at the old artillery ground, Moorfields, and the new ground in Bunhill Fields until about 1658, when the armoury was transferred to the present ground, then known as the New Artillery Garden. During the Commonwealth the company partly declined, but it incorporated with it the Finsbury Archers, and Skipper was its captain, succeeded in 1660 by Monk, with the Duke of York as "Commander-in-Chief." Pepys, who was a steward of the company in 1677, records in 1699 that the ordnance officers were accustomed to try their great guns on the old artillery ground, and that he went there to see the trial of Captain Dean's new gun, known as "Punchinello," because of its "shortness and bigness." The Artillery Company was first described as "Honourable" in 1685. It continued its exercises and marches, with varying fortunes, in the reigns of William III. and Anne, and its condition improved under George I. It was trained in the use of the firelock, the pike, and the halbert. At the grand march of March 2, 1727, there were pioneers "to clear the route," a company of grenadiers in buff, two "grand divisions" of fusiliers in scarlet with sashes, and two "grand divisions" of pikemen, also in scarlet; and the officers and officials of the company included the general, lieutenant-general, and major-general, each carrying a half-pike, several "briviates" and "bringers-up," the beadle, and others. The prosperity of the company continued, and in 1735 the armoury was complete.

Meanwhile the Pilgrim Fathers had carried much military fervour with them, and several of the early settlers, who had been members of the Honourable Artillery Company, established a similar company in Massachusetts in 1639, which was the first organised military force in America. As the "Ancient and Honourable Company of Boston, Massachusetts," it exists to this day, and looks with pride and affection to its English original. The most friendly feelings exist between the two corps, and visits have been exchanged between them. More conservative than the City force, the patriotic company of Boston still retains the esponsions and halberts of a former day. The Honourable Artillery Company of London continued to progress in military efficiency, but had many disputes in regard to its ground, and in 1799 it quarrelled with the Lord Mayor and expelled him from its fold. It rendered good service during the Gordon riots. The Matross, or artillery division, with cannon, was formed in 1781, and upon the outbreak of war in 1803 the enthusiasm was very great. The numbers largely increased, and exercises were constantly taking place, so that the corps became very efficient, and it continued to flourish during the reign of George IV. A decline followed, and early in Her Majesty's reign the court of the company came into conflict with the military authorities, when the old privilege of electing officers and non-commissioned officers was taken away. The company had a double character, being both civil and military, and some members acted as if they had a desire to thwart the operations of the Royal Warrant, and there were some irregular proceedings. However, all differences were accommodated, and the officers became proud to possess Her Majesty's commission. Since that time the Honourable Artillery Company has regained all its prosperity, and has progressed greatly in military efficiency. It is now a force of much value, and the patriotic spirit with which many of its members have gone out to South Africa to fight for Queen and country is ample evidence that the famous company possesses that spirit of devotion to the national welfare and that zeal for efficiency with which it began.

ARMY COMMISSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The drain of the South African War is such that officers are much required for the Army. The vacancies cannot be filled by cadets from Sandhurst because they are too numerous and cadets in many cases are too young for service in the field. A certain number of officers of Militia and Volunteers may be transferred to the line, a number may be promoted from the ranks, but it would be well to have a supply of full-grown, educated men prepared to accept commissions and take the field. A great number of gentlemen too old to enter the Service by competitive examination are longing to serve their country—members of the University, men who have been sixth-form boys at the great public schools, men who have stood well in engineering and agricultural colleges, men who have qualified for commissions, lawyers, surveyors, sportsmen, captains of cricket elevens, captains of football teams, rowers, athletes, marksmen, yachtsmen, riders, and others. All that they want is a little military training to make them valuable subalterns; entrance examinations are unnecessary. The Staff College is now closed but might be opened as a military school, from which two batches of officers could be passed in a year, each batch consisting of 60 or 80 students who would undergo a course of drill, Dutch, field fortification, modern military history, riding, tactics, topography, and the use of arms. If Government would open such a school they would secure a supply of 120 to 160 excellent officers a year, of a class that is now excluded from the Army, while suitable fees being charged to the students, the school could be maintained at little or no cost to the Government. In the college are suitable lecture halls and quarters for 60 officers, and lodgings are to be found in the neighbourhood, so that a school could be set going in a very short time with little trouble to the War Office.

FRIDAY EVENING.

WAR OFFICE, Feb. 2.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officers and non-commissioned officer, whose claims have been submitted for Her Majesty's approval for their conspicuous bravery at the battle of Colenso, as stated against their names:—

Capt. W. N. Congreve, Rifle Brigade (Prince Consort's Own) at Colenso on Dec. 15, 1899, the detachments serving the guns of the 14th and 66th Batteries, R.F.A., had all been either killed, wounded, or driven from their guns by infantry fire at close range, and the guns were deserted. About 500 yd. behind the guns was a donga in which some of the few horses and drivers left alive were sheltered. The intervening space was swept with shell and rifle fire. Capt. Congreve, Rifle Brigade, who was in the donga, assisted to hook a team into a limber, went out, and assisted to limber up a gun. Being wounded, he took shelter; but, seeing Lieut. Roberts fall, badly wounded, he went out again and brought him in. Capt. Congreve was shot through the leg, through the toe of his boot, grazed on the elbow and the shoulder, and his horse shot in three places.

Lieut. Hon. F. H. S. Roberts (since deceased), King's Royal Rifle Corps. Lieut. Roberts assisted Capt. Congreve. He was wounded in three places.

Corpl. G. E. Nurse, 66th Battery R.F.A. Corpl. Nurse also assisted.

Capt. H. L. Reed, 7th Battery R.F.A. Capt. Reed, who had heard of the difficulty, shortly afterwards brought down three teams from his battery to see if he could be of any use. He was wounded, as were five of the 13 men who rode with him, one was killed; and 13 out of 21 horses were killed before he got half-way to the guns, and he was obliged to retire.

The Queen has further been pleased to approve the grant of the Medal for Distinguished Conduct in the Field to the undermentioned soldiers in recognition of their services at the battle of Colenso:—

Royal Artillery.—Corpls. A. Clark and R. J. Money, Acting-Bomb. J. H. Reeve, Drvrs. H. Taylor, H. G. Young, J. E. Petts, G. Rockall, E. W. Lucas, F. Williams, C. J. Woodward, W. Robertson, W. Wright, A. C. Hawkins, J. P. Lennox, A. Nugent (killed in action), J. Warden, A. Felton, and T. Musgrave, and Trmpt. W. W. Ayles.

COMMISSIONERS FOR THE PORT OF RANGOON.

NOTICE.—The Commissioners for the Port of Rangoon require the services of a Royal Naval Officer (on active service) of the rank of Lieutenant of eight years' seniority at least, or of an officer of the Royal Indian Marine of similar standing, to undertake the duties of Deputy Conservator of the Port.

A thorough practical knowledge of Hydrographical surveying is an absolutely indispensable requirement in the officer holding the appointment, as he will have personally to carry out periodical surveys of the Rangoon River and its approaches, with the help of a native assistant, to whom he will be expected to impart instruction in any part of the latter's duties in which he may find his training defective.

The principal duties of the officer appointed will,
however, be the control of the pilots and harbour-masters, the buoying and marking of the river, the berthing of the shipping, &c., &c.; in other words, the Marine Executive control of the Port, under the Commissioners. In these duties he will have the help of the Assistant Conservator, a certificated and experienced master in the Mercantile Marine.

The salary of the appointment is Rs. 800 a month, rising in four years to Rs. 1,000 a month, by annual increments of Rs. 50 for approved service. This rate of pay is inclusive of house allowance and all other allowances except exchange compensation allowance. The officer appointed will be required to live as near the river as possible.

Applications, stating particulars of service, experience, and age, should be addressed to the undersigned so as to reach Rangoon on or before May 1, 1900.

A. B. GATHRER,
Chairman, Port Commissioners,
Rangoon, December 23, 1899.

terms.—Address Mr. Myrtle Villa, Alum Chine Road, Bournemouth.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING

BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—

"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN IN-SURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid, not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAID TO THEM."

N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life Insurance Policy equal to the amount they have spent.

of the continued resolve to maintain your Majesty's supremacy in the town." Those words of loyalty from men enduring with fortitude and unflinching devotion the dangers of bombardment and the increasing hardships of investment must have fallen reproachfully on some ears in that assembly.

In the great national crisis now confronting us, it is of the very first importance that all ranks, classes, and parties present an undivided front. This is no time for recrimination and reopening old sores. The country is engaged in a great and very costly war. Thousands throughout the land already mourn for the fallen, and the duty of all is to further the prosecution of the war to a successful issue with the utmost vigour. The time for overhauling the policy antecedent to the outbreak of hostilities has not yet come, nor yet the time to seek scapegoats for any shortcomings in the military arrangements, whether departmental or executive. What the country demands, and will continue to demand from day to day, is that Government shall freely use the ample resources of the Empire, both at home and in the colonies, to press on the serious war to an early and victorious conclusion. We have learnt at length the quality of the enemy in the field, his fighting power, his deadly and powerful armaments, his great mobility, his defensive skill, all of which we underrated. The Under-Secretary of State for War, in his recent brilliant speech, told the House of Commons that the numerical fighting strength of the two Republics was estimated by the Intelligence Department last year to be nearly 60,000, including 9,000 for possible Dutch rebels and foreign mercenaries combined. The most recent estimates at the present time set the total at 80,000. These latter estimates come from sources likely to be well informed, and it would be prudent to accept the higher figure rather than run the risk of again underrating the enemy. If it be refreshing to be able to record indications of general activity at the front, it is no less agreeable to refer to the existing evidence of an increased activity at home in making provision for the requirements of the war commensurate with the gravity of the occasion. This may be accepted as the immediate outcome of the settled and declared resolve of the Government to atone for past shortcomings, and to prosecute the war with the energy that the country has so long and so loudly demanded. As these lines are being penned, some 15,000 men and 108 guns are on their way to South Africa, and between the 8th and the 12th inst. 13,000 more will leave these shores. The last of these reinforcements, which together aggregate 28,000 men, will be due at Cape Town by March 4. The number of the forces, British and colonial, dispersed over the whole field of operations will then be 194,000, as Mr. Wyndham has informed the House of Commons, and the mounted portion of the same may be expected to reach nearly 40,000, the strength of an army corps. It will be seen, therefore, that if mistakes were made at first in under-estimating the force necessary to prosecute the war with success, the Government have lately displayed an admirable desire to meet the demand for adequate reinforcements. When they all arrive and come into the fighting line matters will begin to assume a different aspect.

Army Notes.

Apparently Lord Roberts intends to move on the Free State, which lies open before him. The head of his army will be the forces of General Kelly-Kenny, who, having occupied Thebus on the railway between Steynsburg and Rosmead Junction, is now in a position to join hands with General Gatacre. Together they should be able to drive the Boers from Stormberg and secure the command of Bethulie Bridge. Should General French be able to advance on Norval's Pont Bridge, the two columns could threaten either Bloemfontein or Fauresmith. Not only is the nature of the country in their favour, but they are well led and fairly mobile. In the Cape Colony Lord Roberts with Lord Kitchener is organising the main army. Burnham, the scout in the Matabele War of 1894, is on his staff, and his body guard is to be largely composed of colonial irregulars. He has also accepted the South African corps to be raised in England by the Royal Colonial Institute. In Canada "Lord Strathcona's Own" is being raised among the roughriders of the North-West and the Bushmen's Corps in Australia. Meantime reinforcements are arriving, and the colonial contingents sent by the Australian and Canadian Governments are on the way. Therefore Lord Roberts should shortly be in command of an army ready to go anywhere and do anything, even in South Africa. That the Boers fear the British Regular only when he is charging with the bayonet they themselves admit, and so they take precious good care to keep him at a distance. The colonial irregular, on the other hand, they fear at all times, because they never know what he will do. He is no more familiar with "book tactics" than themselves, and harasses them with the science of the bush. He can do with a horse what they can, he can seek cover as readily, he is a first rate scout and marksman. And to think that such men were refused at the beginning of the war. Fortunately Lord Roberts is wiser. It has been said of him always that he is a man of no cranks and no prejudices, and certainly in this campaign in South Africa he would seem to be fully justifying his reputation, for he has found a place for everybody, and is thus binding the defensive services of the Empire together in a manner which cannot fail to produce the best possible effect so far as the future of the Empire is concerned. "Now is your opportunity," says Lord Roberts, "to put the martial enthusiasm and soldierly qualities of all your heterogeneous forces to the test. Take full advantage of it. By this means you will do more to stamp out those petty prejudices so injurious to the wellbeing of the Empire." These are the lines upon which Lord Roberts is proceeding and the wisdom of his policy cannot be denied.

Signs are not wanting that the Boers are getting tired of the war. The occupation of Vryheid to cover a possible retreat into the Transvaal is significant; and the rumours as to the Free State discontent are too persistent not to have some foundation of truth. Moreover, the long southern summer is advancing and grass is getting scarce. The Boer, whose whole system of fighting is built up on a recognition of the fact that he must always be ready to take the road home, must be thinking of the long stretches of veldt which lie between him and his beloved farm. How is he to travel where there is no grass? For, like the prairie horse in Canada and the Australian bush horse, the horse of the South African veldt is not stall-fed. Therefore no provision has been made for sending fodder to the front, and it may be doubted whether such arrangements can be made. Without good horses the mobility of the enemy is gone and the wonderful ability to concentrate and disperse, which was the despair of our men until they were reinforced by cavalry and irregulars. It is, however, unlikely that the Boers will wait for the main source of their strength to leave them. Already there are rumours of an earnest wish for peace on the part of the Free Staters, who, unlike the Macdonalds of immortal fame, do not desire the place of honour in battle, and the absurd protest sent by President Kruger and President Steyn to Lord Roberts points to the fact that those astute gentlemen begin to see that the war is about to be carried into the Republics. That it will be the long and arduous business it proved in Natal and the Cape Colony is not anticipated, though Burnham, the American scout, and others equally well qualified to judge, have predicted difficulty in taking Pretoria.

Our continental critics, who are so certain that they could have conducted the South African War to a successful issue long ago, should read "Boer Fighting and British Warfare," a review by General von Schmelting of a book by Major François, the commandant of the forces in German South-West Africa. Both officers admit that the fighting methods of the Boers are peculiar, and must be met by similar methods. Without special training "any European Army would have had to buy its experience" as we have done. Against an enemy who is a past master in the art of keeping himself invisible, laying ambushes, and leaving an entrenched position so that it is not discovered until later, European strategy and tactics are useless. Major François's account of bush fighting is admirable; nothing so good has yet been done by an Englishman. What is more, he draws accurate conclusions from his knowledge of both systems. Testimony from such a man is worth the criticism of all the parade-ground generals in Europe put together. General von Schmelting has not studied the Boers on their own ground, but he is so deeply impressed by his brother-officer's book as to be convinced that no European army would have done any better in South Africa than the British? Would it have done as well? In the first place, no great Power but ourselves could have transported across 6,000 miles of sea sufficient troops, stores, and munitions of war in three months. In the second place, no country in Europe can draw upon irregular forces such as ours. The conditions in old and thickly-populated countries do not admit of the training necessary to produce a roughrider. They have no vast unsettled areas which develop men who, in addition to possessing constitutions of iron, are the most cautious yet daring soldiers in the world, and fine scouts. Without such as these to fall back on, the experience of a European Army in South Africa would indeed be bought at tremendous cost. If our continental critics would confine themselves to pointing out that in spite of one hundred years of Boer and Kaffir warfare we are only now beginning to take its lessons to heart, they would do well. In any other respect they are merely wise on paper or after the event.

There is one thing brought out clearly by the present campaign in South Africa, viz., that the success of 1881 was due far more to bad tactics on our part than good shooting on that of the Boers. This was very plainly pointed out by the German military writer, Von Boguslausk. It was doubtless soothing to our pride to say that we were beaten by the good shooting of the Boers, but those who candidly examine the facts cannot but help admitting that the Boer shooting was wonderfully aided by our own blunders, which were of such a gross nature that they would probably have been equally severely punished by an ordinary European enemy. At Laing's Nek we attacked in column up a valley with a hot hostile fire being poured not only into the head of the column, but also into its two flanks. The only wonder was that our troops pushed in so close to the enemy as they did. At Majuba Hill the main body was kept inactive in camp instead of attacking the Boers, and the detachment on the hill had for its firing line one man to every 10yd., and who were so placed that they could not see down the side of the hill to fire on the Boers, who, finding that our main body in camp were not going to move, boldly attacked the detachment on the hill. This detachment was practically surprised as they did not expect the unseen Boer advance and assault. At Laing's Nek there was nothing to prevent a flank attack being made on the left of the enemy's line, and at Majuba Hill it is hard to understand why the main body was not made use of to act in conjunction with the detachment, especially as the latter was exhausted by a heavy and fatiguing night march up a precipitous slope. Besides these facts we know from experience that when our troops and the Boers met in friendly shooting contests at targets our men almost invariably won. The Boer is certainly a good shot, but only at the ranges at which he has to shoot game, that is up to 300 or 400yd., and he is a very good judge of distance up to the same limit. It is altogether a false idea to attribute our reverses to the Boer shooting alone. We made great—indeed, enormous and inexcusable—tactical blunders within the range of the shooting powers of the Boer, and we suffered accordingly in 1881. We made the common mistake of despising our enemy and met with the consequent result, and we have done the same thing again. For years past the British Army, we grieve to say, has been given over to petty jealousies. Cavalry and artillery being the weaker arms have been placed under a disadvantage. Our disasters in South Africa are largely, if not wholly, due to this fact, and one has not to read the despatches of the generals at the front very attentively to recognise how completely the value of cavalry and artillery must have been underrated when the forces were made up for service.

There seems to be much ignorance on the subject of the Boer. It may be well, therefore, to explain what the personnel of the Army is against which our troops are just now pitted. The Boer is not a soldier; he is essentially a stock farmer, who only cultivates a small area near the homestead sufficient for providing vegetable food for home consumption. He is a heavy smoker, but otherwise is very temperate in what he consumes, drinking almost nothing but black coffee all day long. His personal habits are anything but cleanly to our ideas. He rises at the first streak of daylight to turn out and count his stock, but retires early, soon after nine p.m., and while he reposes he is a very heavy sleeper. Every Boer learns to handle a rifle from childhood, and as ammunition is expensive he soon learns to economise it by good shooting. Every Boer also has a horse which is treated and cared for as a friend. These horses are hardy, somewhat small in size and well trained to stand fire. The Boer farmers are, for military purposes, organised in each district into a "commando" of about 200 men, which is officered by a commandant and two field cornets or subalterns, selected from among the wealthiest farmers of the district. The discipline is good so far as it goes, the commandant's word being law. Each commando falls in in sections of three, which same formation is used on the line of march. Each man has to provide his own horse, food, rifle, and ammunition. The food that is carried is known as "biltong," or sun-dried and salted ox flesh, and rusks. Thus equipped, a commando can move about forty miles a day when it is not accompanied by transport. Hitherto the Boers have not had any regular system of supplies, but this defect in their military system has been made good in the present campaign under the guidance of European instructors. The tactics that the Boers have invariably made use of are very simple. On arriving at the position chosen to be defended every man of a commando dismounts and secures good cover for himself and his horse, and is then ready for action. The Boers as a military force are essentially mounted infantry well trained in skirmishing duties only. Apparently they fight with all their men in one extended line with their horses near at hand, on which they can mount and rapidly retreat or pursue as circumstances may dictate. If they are accompanied by waggons, these are packed some miles in rear of the position taken up for defence. As the Boers know the country so well in which they operate, they are not easily followed up by a pursuing force unless they are hampered with transport.

In the Boer War of 1881 every Boer had orders to fire on a certain individual and to keep on firing until he was hit; hence the large proportion of casualties among officers. They were to select to fire at first the officers, then the non-commissioned officers, and lastly the privates. Every Boer is most anxious to keep his horse out of danger, because if the horse is shot not only is his owner's means of retreat cut off, but the horse being private property he also loses its pecuniary value; besides this the Boer almost looks on his horse as a near relative. The Boer Intelligence Department in the field has proved to be a very efficient one indeed, and this fact, combined with their accurate knowledge of the country and their great rapidity of movement, makes it more necessary that our troops should be kept together in strong bodies, or else if moved in small detachments they are almost certain to be attacked and overwhelmed by superior forces. In our present campaign the first consideration should have been—how many mounted men can be put in the field, and then how many guns? But these requirements were evidently thought of last of all—in fact scarcely thought of at all until disaster after disaster came to bring home to us the impossibility of doing anything with bodies of infantry against such a foe. And whilst we have been discovering what all the world knew but our own military authorities at home, the Boers have been quietly entrenching themselves in almost impregnable positions. It is only right that these facts should be borne in mind at a moment when attempts are being made to cast doubts upon the capacity of the generals at the front, who are thousands of miles away and quite unable to defend themselves. When the public realise how impossible the position of our commanders has been, they will be more ready perhaps to make allowances for them.

In the present campaign excellent work has been done by irregulars. Sir Redvers Buller, Sir George White, General French, and Colonel Baden-Powell have all borne handsome testimony to the gallantry and admirable discipline of locally-raised troops, who, have shown military qualities of a high order at Elands Laagte, Ladysmith, Dordrecht, Mafeking, and Kimberley. We are ready to admit that we should have preferred to see the Boers defeated without recourse to outside aid. We should have desired to find the Army strong enough to meet all demands made upon it; but we have to take facts as we find them, and having regard to the really brilliant achievements of the irregular troops on the several occasions upon which they have been brought into action against the enemy, it is only fair that they should have the credit which is their due. They have acquitted themselves admirably at the outset of the campaign and assisted materially in saving the situation. This being the case, it is not to be wondered at that the Government should have decided to encourage the martial spirit which has manifested itself throughout our colonies. Officers at the front write in terms of unstinted praise of the colonials, who we are told have "taken to the business of war"—we quote from a letter of an experienced staff officer—"in a spirit of gallantry and devotion which has earned for them the respect of all with whom they come in contact. They are splendid fellows, never so happy apparently as when they have to face the music of the enemy's guns." Expressions of opinion like this from those in the field cannot be disregarded, and would seem fully to justify the action of the military authorities. For ourselves, we admit, as we say, that we should have been more satisfied if the Army could have brought the campaign to a successful conclusion without extraneous aid, but whilst taking that view we are ready to recognise the benefit which will accrue to the Empire if the experiment of employing irregulars proves successful to the end, as we trust it will do. Already it has had this good effect—it has established between the mother country and the self-governing colonies a bond of sympathy which will help materially to bring about that system of Imperial defence, which when once started on a proper basis will add enormously to our influence and prosperity as an empire. But it would have been impossible for the home Government to have allowed the game to be altogether one-sided. This fact was appreciated by the Government, and it was on these grounds, we understand, that it was determined to yield to the pressure of events and employ a certain proportion of Yeomanry and Volunteers. The step is a bold one, but in all the circumstances of the situation it will be seen that there was some justification for a procedure which some are disposed to regard with anxiety—not to say disfavour. It would never have done for us to have accepted the proffered support of the colonies and not to have utilised the services of those at home who came forward so patriotically to help the Government in a moment of difficulty. As it is the Government can say, "What your young bloods are doing ours are doing also. Yours are leaving their offices and workshops to fight the battles of their Queen-Empress. You see that ours are not behindhand; they are equally ready, and we are ready to employ them, relying upon their soldierly enthusiasm, as we rely upon the contingents which you have produced." Thus matters are placed on a fair basis which they would not have been had the views of a few narrow-minded critics been accepted. Hence the action of London's civic authorities may not, after all, be so ridiculous as is sought to be made out, for in matters of this kind the City of London has a part to play, and the long-headed merchants of the capital of the Empire are deserving of commendation, not censure, for having come forward as they have done to further the cause of Imperial defence, which promises to become a reality as the result of the present, in some respects, unfortunate campaign in South Africa.

Our misfortunes in South Africa do not, of course, appease the bitterness of our foreign Service contemporaries; but it is gratifying to find that, having expounded at such length and on so many occasions the defects of our methods, they do now really recognise the difficulties of our operations, and the fact that flank marches in such a country are not quite so easy as some of them supposed. The Militär-Wochenblatt is even glad that "Sir Buller" has at length made a flank march, and it draws attention with some pleasure to his movement upon the Upper Tugela although it considers that he has not yet sufficiently considered the important questions of space and time. His movements have been too slow to satisfy the Wochenblatt and some other of our foreign critics. The Belgique Militaire, which is generally very bitter against us, though writing with competence, remarks that the movement upon Trichard's and Potgieter's Drifts was well conceived but lacked celerity, so that it lost the character of a true surprise. "This is the first occasion in the course of this campaign upon which a British general has left the railway line and manœuvred, and it is annoying that the enterprise was not crowned with success." The foreign military papers do not seem to be inclined to forecast the progress of events.

Many of them are beginning to draw lessons from the war. Thus, in the Wochenblatt, Baron von der Goltz discusses the character of operations required in such a country as South Africa in relation to the constitution of the Turkish Ilahe battalions, in which he is specially interested. General Philibert, in the France Militaire, makes the war a text for laying stress upon the great importance of musketry training in the French Army. The Progrès Militaire is particularly interested in the working of the Army Medical Corps, and it urges that the French Government should send out a medical commission in order to report upon the system adopted both by ourselves and the Boers in order that France may profit fully by the experience. It is rather amusing to find that our contemporary thinks Sir William Thomson went out in order to make good the supposed deficiency of our medical officers at the base hospitals near Cape Town. The Progrès introduces its argument with an allusion to the bitter experiences of the French in the Madagascar campaign of 1895, of which it says the history has yet to be written. The fact that the sickness rose at one time to 100 per cent., with a mortality of 75 per cent., leaving available only one-quarter of the entire force—though with slight fever, but accounted valid—should be enough, the Progrès says, to attract the attention of all French medical officers to what is now taking place in South Africa. Quite a deplorable picture is drawn of the lack of preparation which was so terrible in its effect in Madagascar, though the Progrès evidently is not informed as to the very admirable system we have created, and which is now doing such good work for our sick and wounded soldiers. The commission it advocates is to investigate the manner in which we employ our medical resources, the methods of transport adopted, the situation of the hospitals in relation to the operations and the base, the composition of the personnel, the apparatus supplied, and the practice used in removing the sick and wounded to England after treatment in the military hospitals at the Cape.

At the beginning of next week Parliament and the country will be placed in possession of the Government's scheme of national defence. The ministerial statement which is promised on the subject is naturally awaited with very keen interest in military circles. The War Office has kept its secret well, and nothing definite has been allowed to leak out with regard to its intentions. Service members are not without hope, however, that the resolution passed by their committee last week may carry weight with the Government. The fact that the forces remaining in the United Kingdom are not organised as an efficient field army is patent to everybody, and we cordially associate ourselves with the Service members in their hope that the Government will take steps to create a home army equipped with cavalry, artillery, and train. The guns at present supplied to the Auxiliary forces are quite inadequate, and we look to see them provided with mobile artillery of a kind that shall place them on something approaching a footing with the Regulars. If additional barrack accommodation is needed, moreover, the country, we are certain, will not begrudge the expense.

HORSES FOR THE ARMY IN THE FIELD.

At a time when endeavour is being made to provide our mounted forces in South Africa with suitable horses for the work they have to do, it may be useful to refer to some conditions which should be borne in mind in obtaining the required supply. There is perhaps no subject regarding which there is more difference of opinion than that of the horse and his equipment for military service, and it is often the case that appearance and charger-like qualities are preferred to those more useful for the actual work to be undertaken in the field of operations at the time being. Nothing short of practical experience with horses of various classes under the actual conditions of war, or under circumstances very analogous thereto, will admit of a correct judgment being arrived at regarding this difficult question.

The horses, or rather ponies, which the Boers use are mostly small, 14 to 14.2, though very many are below the former standard. They are wiry, active animals, with great endurance, requiring comparatively little food, and being capable of carrying heavier weights over longer distances than would appear possible from their size. Large numbers of these used to be obtainable in the Colsberg and Craddock districts before the war for from £10 to £15 each. They were not regarded as suitable for our British cavalry, which required much larger horses, and these were obtained at prices between £30 to £40, of about 15 to 15.1 hands in height.

In the regulations recently published regarding the Yeomanry service for South Africa it is said that preference will be given to small horses, with those who may bring their own. It might perhaps have been as well to add that ponies would not be objected to. What is termed a small horse in England, say 15 hands, is regarded as a comparatively large one in the Cape and Natal. The class of smart-action pony cob, of 13.2 to 14.2 in height, often seen in butchers' and bakers' carts in the streets at home, would prove excellent mounts for scouting in South Africa. Animals that will clamber in and out amongst rocks, and up and down hills, and that are very easy to mount and dismount, are much more valuable for service than horses possessing many of the qualifications which will command high prices for the hunting field and elsewhere. As it is probable that some of the Yeomanry and mounted infantry may be provided with horses now being sent from India to South Africa, it may be useful to describe what they have to expect in this direction. The sources from which the horses will be drawn are those of the Government of India and its remount establishments, the native cavalry, which are mounted on the sillidar, or ownership, principle, and those from the independent native princes and states. All these, however, have horses mainly selected from three classes; these are Australians or "Walers" (country-breds), Arabs, and Persians.

Australians are imported into India in large numbers annually, as from this source the requirements of the British forces, artillery and cavalry, are mostly met. The shipments usually arrive during the months of November to January, and as the voyage is only about twenty-six days the horses land in very fair condition, particularly those which are carried on the upper decks. Many of these are drafted from the ports of embarkation to the service direct, but the majority are sent to the up-country remount depôts, where they enjoy a period of rest and acclimatisation varying from three months to a year. This is very necessary, for the seasons being reversed in Australia and India, many horses would break down under hard work if called upon to undergo it at once. As the South African climate is, both in season and temperature, much more like that of Australia than India, the importations now being made direct from the colonies will probably have less detrimental effect on them than those made to India.

The Australian horse, as used for the British mounted branches in India, is about 15.1 to 16.1 in height. He makes a splendid remount, and after acclimatisation and breaking leaves little to be desired. He is, however, when in an unbroken condition often very hard to manage and difficult to ride. Notwithstanding the constant assurances of the shippers that most of their animals are perfectly quiet to ride and drive, they have probably never worn a bridle, saddle, or collar, or have ever been backed. In consequence of harsh treatment with stock whips, and during shipment and elsewhere, they are exceedingly timid, and the work of getting on a saddle or bridle is only exceeded in difficulty by getting on the man and of keeping him there when mounted. With kind treatment, however, the horses soon quiet down, and after a few days' perseverance they become amenable. It is often the case that the very worst buck-jumper to begin with ends in proving the sweetest-tempered mount. The native syce, or groom, in India is exceedingly gentle with these horses, with the best results. Even under the most favourable conditions it is necessary to remember the fact that an unbroken Australian horse requires a longer time to handle and break in than the hunter or charger in this country.

The prices paid in India for these horses drafted to the British Service average £50. The native cavalry, which are mostly horsed on the sillidar principle, pay about £22 to £25, but their horses are smaller, though of a very useful sort, averaging 14.3 to 15.1 in height. Of these there are great numbers in Australia, the supply being practically unlimited. Small, compact horses of this class are likely to be of much more use in South Africa to Volunteers, Yeomanry, and mounted infantry than larger and more expensive remounts. They are highly thought of by the Indian cavalry regiments, which, however, cannot afford to purchase them in large numbers, as their fixed regimental price is only about £16, the sum usually paid for country-breds, on which these regiments are mainly mounted.

The country-bred is a horse got by an imported stallion, either T.B.E., H.B.E., Australian T.B., or Arab. In some cases British cavalry are almost entirely mounted on these horses, but they are more suitable for the lighter weights of the native cavalry. They are useful, hardy horses and do not need the acclimatisation of the Australian. They would probably do excellent work in South Africa, where some of them have already been drafted from native cavalry regiments. The best of them are the small, compact horses, 14.3 to 15.1 in height. Greys are not in favour for obvious reasons. They are not purchased at all if the numbers required can be secured without them. The country-bred is an easy horse to break and ride, and has many excellent qualities, but is wanting in the wiry, strong legs of the Australian. Some of the best polo ponies in India are country-bred, 13.2 to 13.3. They are very quick and active, and are often used pig-sticking; they would probably be as useful in scouting and volunteer work in South Africa as other horses of a larger class. The Basuto pony is as good a mount for this purpose as anything of the kind which can be imported into the country, and it is to be hoped that this will be recognised instead of resorting in preference to horses of a larger class at a much greater cost from home, America, India, and the colonies.

The Arab, which is also being sent from India, will be found a very suitable horse for the work required. According to the English standard and general idea he is but a pony, but one with immense endurance, and capable of doing on little where others would die. The well-known march of the 19th Hussars with the desert column in Egypt is an example of what he can accomplish under heavy weights when well handled. He is much in favour with the native princes of India, who, as a rule, prefer him to most other horses. Their polo teams and favourite pig-stickers are mainly selected from amongst these horses. Those who have enjoyed the magnificent sport and hospitality provided by Indian princes, such as Jodhpore and others, and have hunted the boar and followed the polo ball with them, can best say of what the Arab is capable, even when in competition with some of the best horses of other breeds.

The Yeoman or Volunteer who finds himself in South Africa provided with an Arab will probably not regret it, for although by no means perfect, the little horse has a combination of good points rarely possessed by any other type of the noble animal. Amongst the many volumes which have been published regarding the horse and his rider, that of Major-General Tweedie, C.S.I., on the subject of the Arab is conspicuous for its scholarly research and description. He quotes Cromwell as having said, "if a man has not good weapons, horses, and harness, he is as nought." The saying has some application to those now in the field in South Africa, and those who secure Arab horses and test their docility and endurance in time of need may have occasion to remember the sayings in the Kurân and of the Prophet: Al khair mâ-kûd fi nawasi'l khail, i lâ yau-mi'l ki ya-ma—i.e., "Weal is knotted in the forelocks of horses till the day of judgment."

The mobility of mounted forces in mountainous and rocky countries does not depend on large and speedy horses, but rather the reverse. Celerity of movement from place to place, cover, and accuracy of fire are more readily obtained when mounting and dismounting is easy, and when the horse's paces are smooth, than with the rough gallop of the ordinary troop horse. Even with the best-trained cavalry horses and men the operations of dismounting and mounting for fire on foot is one which affords food for reflection, with a view to improvement. In an enclosed country where obstacles have to be negotiated and cleared, doubtless the cavalry troop horse is best; but on the veldt, and amongst rocks and kopjes, the shuffle of the Boer pony is better in many ways; he will usually stand to be mounted, and presents a smaller mark for fire.

It is an ill wind that blows no one good, and the blast is now much in favour of the horse dealer. Those who may have to make their own purchases, either in this country or elsewhere from these individuals, may usefully inquire, when the list of qualifications of the proffered animal is exhausted, "Can he stand still?" A fidgetty, restless horse is more easily obtainable than one with the quiescent virtue, but the latter quality is invaluable for scouting, and when mounting and dismounting have to be rapidly done.

The subject of saddlery and horse equipment is another story, and much might be written about it. Strength, durability, and lightness, with a good fit, are the main essentials. The Service saddlery is made in three sizes, and it is usually supposed that these will fit any horse. Those who have tried them with Arabs, small country-breds, and Walers know well that this is not the case. Doubtless what is requisite in this respect is being provided by the authorities for the many small horses which will be used, but for those who have to supply their own horse equipment mistakes in this respect will prove vexatious and galling in more ways than one. The horses being sent from India, selected from the native cavalry and native states, will probably be provided with their own saddlery and gear; this will be of much advantage, for it is a mistake to suppose that any saddle will fit any horse. A sore man is more easily cured than a sore horse, and it is therefore better that the latter should be well fitted than the former, but as this cannot always be done it is at least desirable that the saddle selected by the Yeoman or Volunteer should be such as he can sit in comfortably. It will be found a good plan to allow 11lb. for the ordinary saddle up to 14lb. for every stone of the rider's weight, and the shape may be said to be a matter of individual taste, so long as the requirements of the particular kit to be carried, and the conditions of service are remembered and met. In the matter of horse clothing and line gear the cavalry patterns cannot be improved on, and should be adopted. They are the result of great practical experience and trials. "Fads" and experiments in this direction are dangerous, and are likely to result in stampedes from pickets—very trying to the horse and to the temper.

These remarks may possibly be regarded as mere platitudes, as they are the A B C of the lesson to be learnt by the horseman in the field. It is, however, extraordinary what simple matters are sometimes overlooked, and how Englishmen, with their intense love of horses, dislike to admit they have anything to learn on the subject. Some of those going to the front as volunteers, good men and true, may not have had the opportunity of learning, and perhaps they may find some of these remarks worth bearing in mind.

Army Personal.

The Duke of Connaught left London on Monday morning for Dublin. He was accompanied by the Duchess. In the suite travelled the Hon. Mrs. Egerton, Captain Malcolm McNeill, Military Secretary, and Captain the Hon. F. Beresford, 7th Hussars, A.D.C. The Duke and Duchess travelled by the half-past eight Irish express from Euston. Their Royal Highnesses left Dublin yesterday evening for London.

Field-Marshal Sir Donald Stewart has left Chelsea Hospital for the Riviera to recuperate after his severe attack of influenza.

General Sir William Lockhart, the Commander-in-Chief in India, we regret to say, is seriously ill. His condition is considered so grave that a dinner which was to have been held at Government House, Calcutta, on Thursday evening was postponed.

General W. C. Hadden, as Colonel-Commandant Royal Engineers, attained the age of eighty-seven on Wednesday. On the previous day General W. H. Bradford, Colonel of the Royal Irish Rifles, had become eighty-five years of age.

Lieut.-General W. H. Bowles, who is appointed to the Colonelcy of the Manchester Regiment, served with the 1st Batn. the old 63rd from 1849 to 1874. He succeeded to the command of the regiment on the death of Colonel W. F. Carter, July 28, 1867, and exchanged to the 37th Regiment with Colonel H. R. Browne, December 1, 1874. He was with the regiment in the Crimea, and took part in the battles of Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman, the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and the capture of Kinburn (mentioned in despatches, medal with four clasps, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal).

Major-General L. J. Oliphant has been appointed to the command of the Militia at Aldershot.

Brigadier-General G. Simpson, I.S.C., D.A.G., Madras, has been appointed the officer in command of the Rangoon district, vice Brigadier-General S. E. Rolland.

The Queen has been pleased to grant to Colonel Sir Francis Reginald Wingate, Sirdar of the Egyptian Army, her Royal license and authority that he may accept and wear the insignia of the Imperial Order of the Osmanieh of the 2nd Class, conferred upon him by H.H. the Khedive of Egypt, authorised by H.I.M. the Sultan of Turkey, as a promotion in that Order, in recognition of his services in connection with the recent operations in the neighbourhood of Gedid.

The Queen paid a visit to Colonel R. S. S. Fetherstonhaugh, the wounded Commander of the 9th Brigade (Lord Methuen's force), at his residence at Ryde on Monday, and remained in conversation with him for over half an hour. Her Majesty was accompanied by Princess Henry of Battenberg. Colonel Fetherstonhaugh, who arrived home from South Africa on Friday, received the Royal visitors at the door, and Her Majesty accepted a bouquet from his little daughter.

The special correspondent of the Daily News forwards a very interesting report of the progress of our wounded at Ladysmith. Many of the instances of recovery that he cites border on the marvellous:—

"Colonel C. E. Beckett (staff), Major F. Hamersley (staff), Captains Silver, Pike, Royal Irish Fusiliers, and others of those wounded at Dundee, are doing well. Major H. Mullaly, R.E., Lieutenants Crichton, Maitland, MacGregor of the Gordons, and Bond, Rifle Brigade, are out of danger.

"Major Hoare, 5th Dragoon Guards, had a badly fractured skull, which was completely riddled. At first bad symptoms showed themselves, but the wound has nevertheless now nearly healed.

"Captain G. Paley, Rifle Brigade, who received a bullet wound through both hips, is recovering rapidly, and examination of his injury under the Röntgen rays shows the growth of new bone where the left leg was badly shattered near the hip joint. The surgeons hope that this leg may still be useful.

"Captain Lowndes, Royal Dublin Fusiliers, who was wounded in the same night attack when the enemy's guns on Surprise Hill were destroyed, was regarded as having been very dangerously hit. It was thought that amputation alone could save him, but he is now making rapid progress towards complete recovery.

"Lieutenant Biron's shattered limb is also healing well. Captain S. Mills, Rifle Brigade, had a narrow shave, a bullet passing through a part of the lung and breaking the bone of the spinal column. Wonderful as the statement may sound, he is likely to suffer no permanent injury, and is mending fast.

"Lieutenant Campbell, of the Imperial Light Horse, who received a bullet through the mouth and the base of the skull, is also rapidly approaching a sound state.

"Lieutenants J. E. T. Masterson, H. R. Gunning, Fisher, Barker, Stephens (? Captain M. F. M.), Meiklejohn, and Richardson, Captain Bishdult (? J. D. T. Bishop), Lieutenants (? A. B. P.) Harrison, Tungham (?), and MacLachlan are fit for light duty."

A correspondent, "Gunner," writes: "How much all friends of Colonel Long, R.A., will appreciate the very generous and forcible remarks in your article last week on the South African despatches with reference to the loss of the guns at the battle of Colenso. As you know, doubtless, as well as I can tell you, there is not living, according to the estimate of all artillery officers, a braver, better soldier, and a truer-hearted comrade than Colonel Long. It is impossible to suppose that he would or could be willingly guilty of disobedience to orders. On the very day that your criticism appeared the following from the pen of Mr. Winston Churchill was published in the Morning Post, which I trust you will let me quote in full:—

"In regard to Colonel Long, though doubtless he committed an error of judgment in the engagement at Colenso by pushing his batteries too near the river, where they came under a heavy rifle fire, it should be remembered, firstly, that it was believed that there were no Boers on this side of the Tugela; and, secondly, that the batteries thus advanced got underneath the fire of the enemy's great guns, and into a position where their own fire was most effective, silencing Fort Wylie completely and remaining in action for over an hour. The consequences of Colonel Long's error were serious, but the error itself arose neither from rashness nor from incapacity. Colonel Long belongs to the best type of dashing horse gunner, and he is a devoted believer in, and a great authority on, artillery. At the battle of Atbara he rammed his guns into the attack with the infantry, and greatly aided the assaulting columns. The Sirdar entrusted him with the task of rearming the Egyptian batteries, and his beautiful weapons, similar to those recently purchased by the Lord Mayor, materially contributed to the victory at Omdurman. When terribly wounded at Colenso Colonel Long behaved with devoted gallantry, urging his gunners to fight their pieces to the last. He shares with General Hildyard the credit of not abandoning Estcourt when Joubert was advancing in November, and of thus reducing the area of Natal ravaged by the Boers. His condition is now a sad one, as a grave operation was performed on January 25, and his internal injuries are severe. The public and the press, when recognising where the mistake lay, must judge generously and moderately an officer of an iron constitution and a distinguished career, whose health and reputation were stricken in an hour through an error of judgment which is not the greatest that this war records. Moreover, under present conditions the artillery can ill afford to lose the knowledge, enterprise, and energy of this brave and able soldier."

It would be natural to suppose that gunners would be sore at the loss of guns in action, but the character of Colonel Long stands far too high in the estimation of the "Royal Regiment" for there to exist any doubt as to his action. Therefore all must agree with you. Explanation from the wounded officer should be awaited before the case is prejudged."

Colonel Sir T. H. Holdich, K.C.I.E., R.E., will be placed on the retired list on Tuesday next on attaining the age limit.

Colonel G. Henry, R.E., has been appointed Officiating D.A.G., Madras.

Colonel T. G. Crawley, half pay, formerly of the King's Regiment, will be placed on the retired list on Monday next on attaining the limit of age.

Colonel G. W. N. Rogers completes his term of command of the 18th Regimental District, Birr, on Saturday next.

Colonel J. Courtney is granted a further extension of his appointment as A.A.G. in Ireland until April 28.

One senior colonel is disposed of by the voluntary retirement of Colonel W. H. Bayly, who commanded the 50th Regimental District, 1894-99. Colonel Bayly obtained his present rank December 23, 1889.

Colonel T. R. Cowie, I.S.C., will be placed on the unemployed supernumerary list on Monday.

There appears to have been some misunderstanding as to who commanded the 2nd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders at the battle of Magersfontein, where the regiment suffered so severely. We are in position to state that the battalion was then led by Lieut.-Colonel J. W. Hughes-Hallett, D.S.O., and that the report that he was sick in hospital at the time is entirely erroneous.

Lieut.-Colonel L. A. Hope, C.B., A.A.G. in Egypt, has vacated his appointment and left for South Africa to join the staff in Cape Colony.

Lieut.-Colonel A. T. Sloggett, R.A.M.C., in charge of the Imperial Yeomanry Hospital, will leave Southampton to-day in the Norman for South Africa.

Major B. R. Ward, R.E., has been appointed Professor of Fortification and Geometrical Drawing at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, vice Lieut.-Colonel R. W. D. Connor, R.E., appointed to duty at Dover.

Major J. A. Carleton, 2nd Batn. King's Own Regiment, returned as missing at Spion Kop, is one of four brothers who went to South Africa for the present campaign, sons of Colonel G. Carleton, retired list, Royal (late Madras) Artillery. The eldest son, Lieut. Colonel F. R. G. Carleton, a Staff College graduate, commanding the 1st Batn. Royal Irish Fusiliers, is a prisoner of war in Pretoria, having been present at Nicholson's Nek. The second, Lieut.-Colonel G. D. Carleton, also a Staff College graduate, commands the 1st Batn. Leicestershire Regiment at Ladysmith. Major G. A. Carleton is the third son, and Captain L. R. Carleton, 1st Batn. Essex Regiment, who also has the Staff College certificate, the fourth. Captain F. M. Carleton, King's Own Regiment, A.D.C. to Major-General Woodgate, who was slightly wounded at Spion Kop, is a son of Major-General H. A. Carleton, C.B., R.A. The two families have given between them nine sons to the Army.

Major A. G. Balfour, 2nd Batn. Highland Light Infantry, is appointed Inspector of Musketry in the Home and Woolwich Districts as a temporary arrangement.

Captain H. J. Jones, I.S.C., has been selected for employment with the Egyptian Army.

Captain H. A. Lempiere, 7th Dragoon Guards, has relinquished his appointment as Brigade-Major of the Cavalry Brigade, Aldershot, in order to accompany his regiment on active service.

Captain G. S. C. Swinton, retired list, late Highland Light Infantry, has been appointed to headquarters for temporary duty as a Staff-Captain.

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

SUMMARY OF THE WAR.

Saturday, Feb. 3.

The Court Circular notified that the Queen was much touched and gratified at receiving yesterday morning the following telegram, forwarded by runner from the Mayor of Mafeking, dated Jan. 27:—

"Mafeking, upon the 100th day of siege, sends loyal devotion to your Majesty, and assurance of continued resolve to maintain your Majesty's supremacy in this town."

The New Zealanders, Rimington's Guides, and a squadron of the Life Guards occupied positions on the extreme right flank in the neighbourhood of a large force of the enemy in a most audacious manner. The New Zealanders made a sweep of the neighbouring hills in company with the Guides, while the Carabiniers under Col. Porter co-operated on flank and front. Potfontein and several hills were reconnoitred and occupied, and finally a kopje which the enemy has been occupying for some time past was rushed and taken, the enemy clearing out after offering a very slack resistance. One of the New Zealanders was wounded. In the meantime the Carabiniers were sweeping the country further north, as far as Ratelpoort and Hebron. Very few Boers were encountered, but small parties were seen retreating in the distance. The operations took up the whole day.

The Royal Engineers stated to have begun the building of a bridge across the Modder River at its confluence with the Riet, which will render our camp independent of the ford which has been used for transport, but which has frequently been impassable owing to the flooding after rain. They are also sinking wells near the river bank, and have found beautifully cool water. The waters of the Modder and Riet were found to be unwholesome.

Lieut.-Gen. French was at Cape Town, having gone there to consult with Lord Roberts.

Lieut.-Col. Girouard, R.E., Director of Military Railways, who had been hard at work since his arrival from Egypt, had left for De Aar junction.

Col. A. S. Wynne, C.B., D.A.G. in Natal, stated in telegram to have been appointed to command the 10th Brigade in Sir Charles Warren's Division, in succession to Major-Gen. Sir E. R. Woodgate, severely wounded, and Col. H. S. G. Miles, M.V.O., selected to succeed Col. Wynne, as D.A.G. to Sir Redvers Buller.

Monday, Feb. 5.

There was a complete dearth of news to-day. The War Office stated at midnight that it was without information from any of the centres of activity.

Brig.-Gen. Brabant, commanding the Colonial Division, addressed one of the regiments on parade at Queenstown during the morning. He said they were leaving next morning for the front, not to return, he hoped, till the task entrusted to him by Lord Roberts was successfully accomplished. He could not disclose the plan of operations, but if his intentions were carried out the greatest glut of fighting among them would have his fill.

The Daily Telegraph published a despatch from its Cape Town correspondent:—

"Gen. French has now got 7,000 Boers practically shut up in the hills around Colesberg. The enemy have removed their laager to the centre of the kopjes just beyond range of our artillery. Common shell is much needed at the front, as shrapnel is useless when used against concealed hill entrenchments. Throughout the north of Cape Colony the enemy are becoming alarmed. At Stormberg they see our force being strengthened, in front of them being Gen. Gatacre, while on their flank is Gen. Kelly-Kenny, and presently Gen. Brabant will be endangering their communications. In fact, our strategic plans are maturing on every side under Lord Roberts's hands."

Major-Gen. MacDonald, in command of the Highland Brigade, the 9th Lancers, and a field battery, executed an important flanking movement to the right of the Boer position at Magersfontein. The force left Lord Methuen's camp on Sunday, and advanced to Koodoosberg Drift on the Riet River, which was reached after a trying march. The Highland Light Infantry bivouacked for the night on the north bank, and at daylight on Monday the cavalry advanced northward. Shots were exchanged with scattered parties of the Boers; but no resistance of a serious kind was offered. The infantry were not engaged in any way. Koppiesdam commands the roads from Kimberley to Hopetown and Douglas, and is within striking distance of the Boer laagers at Kameel's Hoek and Griquatown. It would appear to lie north-west of Spytfontein.

The Lord Mayor received telegram from Lord Roberts:—

"Cape Town, Feb. 5.—To the Lord Mayor, London.—I can assure your lordship we heartily welcome as comrades the City of London Imperial Volunteers, who are a valuable addition to our force. The mounted infantry portion proceeds shortly to the front, as will the remainder of the corps after their arrival. All ranks will, I am confident, worthily uphold in South Africa the traditions of the great city they represent.—ROBERTS."

Tuesday, Feb. 6.

Morning Post published a despatch from Mr. Winston Churchill from Spearman's Camp:—

"Sir Redvers Buller's speeches to the troops have produced a profound effect on all ranks. The soldiers are not in the least dispirited, but await with confidence and impatience the moment for the renewal of the attack. During the impending operations it is probable that no press telegrams will be permitted to leave here, but people at home must believe that everyone is trying to do his best for their sake and for gallant, suffering Ladysmith. The fighting power, moral and material, of the Army was never higher than now."

The Standard's correspondent at Spearman's Camp said in a telegram:—

"Major-Gen. Woodgate's condition remains about the same. It seems that his injuries were caused, not by a bullet, but by some fragments of a shell, which inflicted an ugly wound over his left eye. Sixty more or less serious cases are under treatment at the main station hospital. Originally there were 800 patients there, but most of them have since been drafted down country. The Boers have been indulging in some blasting operations near Spion Kop. Presumably they are making a road for their big guns, preparatory to putting them in position on the hills. We learn from Ladysmith that our artillery fire smashed up seven of the Boer guns."

Presidents Kruger and Steyn said to have addressed to Lord Roberts an extraordinary protest against the alleged devastation of Boer farms and other acts of violence by British troops. Lord Roberts has replied repudiating the charge and intimating that British soldiers are not accustomed to indulge in such misconduct.

Writing from Rensburg the Times correspondent reported:—

"Owing to Gen. French's excellent selection of positions and brilliant tactics we have been enabled to keep in check a large force of the enemy round Colesberg. The situation is unchanged. Lyddite shells have been seen from Coles Kop to-day bursting in the Boer laager, north-west of Slingersfontein, with great accuracy."

Princess Christian and her daughter Princess Victoria of Schleswig Holstein visited the sufferers from the war at Netley Hospital. Six extra companies of Imperial Yeomanry sanctioned.

Wednesday, Feb. 7.

The silence which has been maintained for several days in regard to the movements of Gen. Buller was broken during the evening by the issue of an official announcement:—

"The War Office has received information that Sir Redvers Buller crossed the Tugela on Monday. The operations are still in progress, but there is no information as to the result."

According to published accounts the movement began at daybreak, one brigade making a strong feint on the left while two battalions of infantry covered the advance of the field artillery starting from near Potgeiter's Drift, and moving towards the Boer centre. This force skirmished steadily on towards the enemy's main position, drawing a heavy fire upon them. Then the main attacking force was thrown forward, being admirably covered by the naval guns and a mounted battery placed on Zwarts Kop.

The field batteries operating advanced rapidly despite a heavy flank fire from two Creusot guns. The gunners, it is said, cared for nothing but to get at the enemy, and nothing could restrain the dash of our men. A heavier fire was poured in upon the Boers, and the men went on and carried Vaal Krantz with a magnificent rush at the point of the bayonet. The afternoon was then drawing to a close, and the infantry gave all their attention to making their position secure, and this work was further proceeded with on Tuesday. The naval guns were busy all day.

There was some skirmishing near Sterkstroom to-day between Gen. Gatacre's advanced outposts and a Boer force, which, however, after making threatening demonstrations, retired on the approach of British reinforcements.

Announced that the 4th Cavalry Brigade, which it had been intended should be supplied with mounted infantry from the battalions in Burma, is to draw contingents from the 2nd Batn. Leicestershire Regiment, 1st Batn. Royal Berkshire Regiment, 1st Batn. Yorkshire Light Infantry, 4th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, 2nd Batn. Manchester Regiment, and the Rifle Brigade, with a machine-gun section from the 2nd Batn. Liverpool Regiment. The battalion, 300 strong, to mobilise at Aldershot.

Thursday, Feb. 8.

Up to midnight no further news of Gen. Buller's movements had come to hand.

A despatch to the Natal Witness, dated from Spearman's Camp on Wednesday evening gave, however, some details as to the fighting on Monday and Tuesday, the result of which is said to be that "Gen. Buller has gained possession of the first turning key in the road to Ladysmith." The message concludes with the statement that all efforts to drive the British from the captured position have proved unavailing.

The Times special correspondent at Spearman's camp telegraphing on Wednesday evening describes the attack by the 1st Batn. Durham Light Infantry, which carried the hill, as most brilliant, and adds that the loss incurred in making it was very slight.

A first list of casualties sent by Gen. Buller and issued by the War Office showed that the regiment had two officers killed and six wounded, and about 86 rank and file killed and wounded. The 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade lost five officers wounded, and about 70 rank and file killed and wounded. The casualties among the other battalions engaged were few.

From Modder River it was reported that Gen. MacDonald maintained his position at Koodoosberg.

Friday, Feb. 9.

The position of affairs at the front at the time of going to press was this:—

Major-Gen. MacDonald's brigade, which on Sunday seized Koodoosberg, has been ordered to retire. The Boers to Gen. MacDonald's north made an attack on his position on Monday afternoon, but it was not driven home. There was desultory fighting on Tuesday, whilst on Wednesday the Boers appear to have made a serious effort to dislodge the Highlanders. Fighting was going on practically all day, the Boers being finally repulsed. Our losses were about 50 killed and wounded. The 2nd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders and 1st Batn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders seem to have borne the brunt of the fighting, and are reported to have conducted themselves admirably.

Some further details of the fighting beyond the Tugela on Monday and Tuesday had been received, but there was no information as to Gen. Buller's subsequent movements.

Nothing whatever was known in official circles of the rumour which was again current during the morning that Ladysmith had been relieved.

Lord Roberts, it seems, left Cape Town for the north on Tuesday night. He was accompanied by his staff, and by his personal body guard of 40 colonial Volunteers.

The supplementary estimate of the further amount required in the year ending March 31 in consequence of the war in South Africa was placed on the table of the House of Commons yesterday. The amount asked for is £13,000,000. The Army Votes under which the amount will be accounted for are:—

1. Pay, &c., of the Army	-	£2,400,000
2. Medical establishments: pay, &c.	-	70,000
3. Militia: pay, &c.	-	250,000

"Lieutenant-Colonel, Retired," writes: "At present there is a good deal of controversy on rifles and rifle shooting. As you are aware, there is a force of as fine material as can be had for the purpose—the Militia artillery of the three kingdoms. This force of gunners are armed with Lee-Netford carbines, which they would be expected to use in case of an attack on them by infantry. I regret to say they would be quite incapable of doing so as not a single unit of the whole force has ever been put through a course of musketry, not a man ever fired a shot out of his carbine, and still these men would be expected to shoot straight if required to do so. The excuse the War Office give is that the time of training is too short; this I would say could be remedied by the department that makes it an excuse."

Obituary.

NAVY.

Admiral L. E. H. Somerset.—Admiral Leveson Eliot Henry Somerset died suddenly on the 7th inst. at his residence in Curzon-street. The second son of Lord Granville Somerset, M.P., he was born in 1829 and entered the Navy in 1843, obtaining his Lieutenant's commission in 1851. As Gunnery-Lieutenant of the Duke of Wellington he served in the Russian War in the Baltic, landing with the naval brigade at the capture of Bomarsund and being employed in the battery that breached Fort Nottich in 1854. In the following year he was present at the bombardment of Sveaborg, when he commanded a rocket boat during the night attack, and for his services in the war he received the Baltic medal. In 1856 he was promoted to Commander. In 1862 to Captain, in 1878 to Rear-Admiral, in 1884 to Vice-Admiral, and in 1888 to Admiral. In 1891 he was placed on the retired list. From September, 1875, to February, 1878, he was Superintendent of Bermuda Dockyard, and from November, 1876, to February, 1878, he was a naval A.D.C. to the Queen. Admiral Somerset was second in command of the Channel Squadron from June, 1880, to June, 1881.

Major-Gen. Sir C. Louis, R.M.L.I.—Major-Gen. Sir Charles Louis, R.M.L.I., died at Mentone on the 6th inst. Sir Charles Louis was the son of Admiral Sir J. Louis, and was born in 1818. He joined the marines in 1837, and served in Syria at the storming of Sidou, and at d'Jouni, also with the Baltic expeditions in 1854-55, including the action with a battery at the mouth of the Narva on June 18. On June 21 he was severely wounded by the explosion of an infernal machine. Gen. Louis retired from the service as a Colonel-Commandant in 1873, and succeeded to the baronetcy in 1893. Sir C. Louis was twice married, first, in 1856, to Jane, daughter of Mr. J. McKay, and, secondly, to Ada Georgiana, daughter of the Rev. J. C. Napleton. He is succeeded by his son, Mr. Charles Louis, who was born in 1858.

Capt. the Hon. A. Hay Drummond.—Capt. the Hon. Arthur Hay Drummond died at Mentone on the 28th ult. at the age of 66. He joined as Naval Cadet 1846, became Sub-Lieutenant 1852, Lieutenant 1853, Commander 1856, and retired in 1871 with the rank of Captain. His last appointment was Flag-Lieutenant to Vice-Admiral Sir George F. Seymour, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, from which he was promoted Commander, but did not serve again. In 1855 he assumed the name of Drummond in lieu of the family patronymic Hay, on succeeding to the Cromlix and Inverpeffray estates.

Commander W. F. Gregory.—Commander William Filmer Gregory, retired, died at Ryde on the 20th ult., aged 70 years. He became Naval Cadet 1843, Sub-Lieutenant 1850, Lieutenant 1853, and retired with the rank of Commander in 1867. He was Sub-Lieutenant of the Thetis 1850-52, Lieutenant of the Duke of Wellington 1853-55, during the Baltic expedition, when he distinguished himself by cutting out a Russian boat at Bomarsund (medal), Lieutenant of the Russel 1855-57, Hamibal 1858-60, Blenheim 1861-62, and retired in 1867 with the rank of Commander.

Commander W. H. Payne.—Commander William Henry Payne, retired, died at Wootton Bridge on the 21st ult., aged 84 years. He became Naval Cadet 1830, Sub-Lieutenant 1837, Lieutenant 1845, and retired with the rank of Commander in 1862. From 1853-62 he was Naval Agent on board contract mail steam vessels.

Capt. T. M. Nelson, R.M.L.I.—Capt. Thomas Morice Nelson, R.M.L.I., retired, died at Haslar Hospital on the 23rd ult. He was son of the late Insp.-Gen. Thomas Nelson, whose last service was at that establishment, and joined as Lieutenant 1882; became Captain in 1892; and retired in 1895 on account of ill-health.

ARMY.

Col. W. L. K. Ogilvy, C.B.—Col. William Lewis Kinloch Ogilvy, C.B., Lieutenant-Colonel, retired list, late King's Royal Rifles, died suddenly on Saturday last at Malvern. FOREIGN.

Rear-Admiral Walrond.—Rear-Admiral Walrond, who lately died in Vienna, whither he had gone to recruit his health, held at the time the command of the Russian Mediterranean Squadron, in which he had succeeded Admiral Skrydloff. He was an officer greatly esteemed, who had held many staff and executive appointments, and his death was greatly regretted in the Russian Navy. The late admiral came of an English stock, and appears to have been descended from one of those officers who left this country to take service with Peter the Great or his successor, Catherine. Admiral Walrond has been succeeded in command of the Russian Mediterranean Squadron by Rear-Admiral Biriloeff.

CAVALRY.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers).—A correspondent writes to us from the front:—

"On Dec. 7 the regiment with two companies of mounted infantry and the New Zealand Mounted Rifles started from Naauwpoort to reconnoitre the enemy's position beyond Arundel. The reconnaissance that day got as far as Arundel; our patrols came under the enemy's fire, and Adj. Muller of the Boer Army was captured by the Carabiniers' picket. The troops bivouacked that night on the veldt. The following morning, the 8th, the reconnaissance was pushed on to the enemy's main position, a natural stronghold called Taiboshlaagte. The position of the enemy was located and his strength estimated. The regiment came under the fire of the enemy both from his musketry, machine guns, and shells. A wing of the regiment on each flank pushed the reconnaissance well round the flanks of his position. The force then went into camp at Arundel, where it still remains and where it has been joined by other troops. On Dec. 12 a patrol under Lieut. Collis was fired on from the farm of Jagersfontein near the eastern extremity of the Boer position. Lieut. Collis and several men had their horses shot. Sergt. Freeman and Pte. Ross, both of whom were wounded, were taken by the Boers. In the afternoon this farm was shelled by us and entered by some of our men. On the following day, the 13th, an attack was made on our camp at Arundel at a very early hour. Lieut. Moncrieff's patrol discovered the enemy's movement about four a.m. and reported it. Our force turned out at once. The Boers had sent out three parties of 100, 500, and 500 and three guns, and he intended to move round a low line of kopjes on the east of our camp, and either to shell the camp or to cut the railway in our rear. Our force consisted of the Carabiniers, two squadrons of the Inniskilling Dragoons, two squadrons of the 10th Hussars, R. Battery R.H.A., 300 of the Royal Berkshire Regiment, two companies of mounted infantry, the New Zealand Mounted Rifles, and the New South Wales Lancers, and it was in action from five a.m. till four p.m. In the end the enemy retired to Taiboshlaagte without having accomplished anything. He had been reinforced during the day and it is believed that he had 1,700 men out. Our guns made excellent practice, silencing the Boer guns at once, and inflicting some loss in men and horses upon the enemy. The cavalry acting, both mounted and dismounted, threatened the enemy's flanks and held him in check until he retired. One squadron of the Carabiniers with two guns held the detached hill called Vaal Kop during the day. The Carabiniers had 10 horses killed and four men wounded, one of whom, Pte. Webb, died the next day. The other men wounded are Lance-Corpl. Pickings and Ptes. Carmell and Underwood. These are doing well. We find ourselves face to face with an enemy who is posted in a strong natural position at Taiboshlaagte, which has the road and the railway to Colesberg. It is not possible for us to advance or to assault him until we get reinforcements. The enemy's numbers are estimated at 3,000 to 4,000, and he is entrenching himself strongly. Besides this he has long-range guns, one of which carries some 6,000 yds., machine guns, and quick-firing guns throwing small shells."

7th Dragoon Guards.—Headquarters and the service troops left England on Thursday in the Armenian for South Africa. Major Peters has relinquished his appointment on the remount staff in order to accompany headquarters to the front.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys).—Lieut. Conolly left England on Saturday last for South Africa in the Canada to join headquarters for duty with the Egyptian Army.

3rd Hussars.—Lieut. Chinnery is about to retire. 7th Hussars.—Capt. Brooke, D.S.O., has been appointed second in command of the South African Light Horse.

8th Hussars.—Headquarters and two squadrons will take passage for South Africa in the Norseman, which sails from Liverpool to-day. One squadron leaves the Royal Albert Docks on Wednesday next in the Sicilian.

10th Hussars.—There has just been erected in the south choir aisle of York Minster a mural tablet to the memory of the late Major, Duke of Clarence and Avondale, who for a long period was a familiar figure at the minister services when the regiment was quartered at York. The tablet is of white Carrara marble on a slab of Belgian red marble, and has been designed by the Dean of York. It represents a chaplet of bay leaves suspended from a coronet by noble knights round their helmets in mediaeval times, and is so depicted on many of the recumbent effigies throughout England. The idea of the present memorial is simply the coronet of the soldier Prince, bound with sprays of bay and the cross, hung up on the wall of the cathedral church where he attended so frequently during his sojourn in York. Within the wreath is the following inscription in gold: "To the Honoured Memory of H.R.H. Albert Victor Christian Edward, K.G., Duke of Clarence and Avondale, Major 10th Hussars, and stationed in this Prince, a constant friend. This tablet is placed in the Cathedral Church of York by the Dean, January 14, 1900." Major Kavenagh has left this week for South Africa in the Canada to join headquarters at the front.

13th Hussars.—Capt. Collins, Reserve of Officers (late 17th Lancers), is en route to South Africa in charge of a draft of the regiment to join headquarters.

15th Hussars.—Lieut.-Col. Gordon has left India for the Cape, having been selected to command the 17th Lancers during the time that it is in the field in South Africa. 2nd Lieut. Cantrell-Hubbersty, who was lately bitten by a mad dog in India, has arrived in Paris for treatment at the Pasteur Institute.

16th Lancers.—The officers who arrived in South Africa from India with the regiment were: Lieut.-Col. Aylmer; Major Oswald; Capt. MacEwen, Bagwell-Purefoy, Macalpine-Lenzy, Tuson, Bellow, and Eccles; Lieuts. Campbell, Heskeith, MacCulloch, Harris, and Vander-Byl, and H. Hart (Quartermaster); and 2nd Lieuts. Neave and Fowler.

17th Lancers.—Headquarters and the service troops will leave Tilbury Docks in the Victorian for South Africa on Wednesday next. Major Ricardo has returned to duty after his recent serious accident. Sir Francis Burdett accompanies the regiment on service.

Lieut. G. H. Willis, at the Isle of Wight, ordered to India.

Lieut. G. E. J. Durnford, at Malta, ordered to Chatham.

Lieut. R. H. Thomas from Dera Ismail Khan on leave to England.

Lieut. C. S. A. Akerman from Gravesend to Chatham.

Lieut. F. C. Puller from special course, Midland Railway, Sierra Leone.

Capt. F. L. Lloyd, Chief Instructor at the Plymouth School of Submarine Mining, has been selected to go out to South Africa in charge of the detachment of the corps of Electrical Engineer Volunteers accepted for service, which will be joined later on by Major Crompton, commandant of the corps.

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Lieuts. Maxwell and Vaughan, 3rd Batn., have arrived home from South Africa invalided.

Coldstream Guards.—The remains of Major the Marquis of Winchester, who was killed at Magersfontein, arrived at the Royal Albert Docks on Monday evening on board the Sicilian, and were interred on Thursday at Amport St. Mary, Andover, with military honours, after cremation at Woking. The ceremony of cremation took place on Tuesday afternoon, Col. Vesey Dawson being present to represent the regiment. The ashes were placed in an urn, surmounting which was a silver plate with the inscription: "Augustus John Henry Beaumont Paulet, 15th Marquis of Winchester. Born Feb. 6, 1858; killed in action Dec. 11, 1899." The urn was placed in an oak coffin, the wood of which was grown on the deceased officer's estate. The funeral took place on Thursday with full military honours. A detachment of the regiment arrived early in the morning to take part in the ceremony. Later a special train conveyed a large party of mourners from London to Andover. Included in the party were the Rev. Edgar Sheppard, Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal, and the choir of the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Queen was represented by Col. the Hon. H. Legge and the Duke of Cambridge by Major-Gen. the Hon. H. F. Eaton. There were eight pall-bearers—the Hon. G. Ormsby Gore, Col. the Hon. H. C. Legge, Lord St. Oswald, Sir J. Gladstone, Col. Vesey Dawson, Col. D. Dawson, Col. the Hon. H. W. L. Corry, and Major-Gen. Viscount Falmouth. The mourners included the present Marquis of Winchester (brother), the Marchioness of Winchester, Lady Lilian Wemyss (sister), Lord Sandys, Vice-Admiral Sir H. Stephenson, Gen. the Hon. Sir P. Feilding, Gen. Sir R. Gipps, Col. Sir E. Antrobus, Capt. Sir W. Corbet, Viscount de Vesci, Capt. A. Lovell, Lord Romilly, Col. Ricardo, the Earl of Ilchester, the Hon. H. Bourke, the Earl of Pembroke, and Viscount Coke. Among those who attended as officially representing the Coldstream Guards were: Major Frederick; Capt. Lambton, McNeile, and Case; and Lieuts. Grant and Hanbury-Tracy.

Scots Guards.—Major the Hon. N. Dalrymple-Hamilton, 1st Batn., has arrived home from South Africa invalided, having had his left arm amputated. Major Erskine, 3rd Batn., has been appointed Acting Brigade-Major, Home District, vice Capt. Gascoigne, D.S.O., Grenadier Guards, proceeding on service.

Queen's Regiment (2nd).—Major Dunne, retired list, has been appointed to the command of the dépôt at Guildford.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. leaves Southampton to-morrow for South Africa in the Majestic.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. leaves England to-day for Malta in the Pavonia to relieve the 1st Batn. Royal Sussex Regiment. Lieut. and Adj. Fishbourne, 1st Batn., has arrived home from South Africa invalided.

Royal Warwickshire Regiment (6th).—The new 4th Batn. is being raised at Colchester; having been taken on to the strength of the Army from the 1st inst.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—Steps are to be taken at once to raise the proposed 4th Batn. The Cephalonia has brought home 140 men from the 3rd Batn. at Gibraltar, which are to form a nucleus for the new unit. Capt. Hickie, 1st Batn. left England for South Africa on Saturday last in the Canada.

Lincolnshire Regiment (10th).—Lieut.-Col. Roberts completes his four years in command of the 2nd Batn. in South Africa on Saturday next. He has been granted an extension for 12 months.

Devonshire Regiment (11th).—Mrs. Bullock, the wife of Lieut.-Col. Bullock, 2nd Batn., now a prisoner at Pretoria, has received a letter from her husband. Writing of his officers, Col. Bullock says:—

"Nothing could have been more gallant, cool, and skilful than the way they all behaved. They advanced through a terrific fire and brought their men on most gallantly, and never flinched or showed a moment's consideration for themselves. Poor Goodwin was hit just as he reached the last trench, and lay for hours in extreme pain, never showing a sign of it, like a gallant English gentleman. Walter was equally cool and brave, and when ordered a short advance, he, Bonham and Smyth-Osbourne led their men on under a ghastly fire."

Suffolk Regiment (12th).—Major Graham has been appointed second in command of the 2nd Batn. in India, vice Major Mackenzie, promoted to the command of the 1st Batn. in South Africa. Major Lloyd and Lieuts. Frankland and Foster, 1st Batn., Capt. Keates and Lieut. White, 2nd Batn., and Capt. the Hon. G. O. Cadogan, 3rd Batn., left England on Saturday last in the Canada for South Africa to join the 1st Batn. at the front. Capt. Hopkins has vacated his appointment in the West African Regiment in order to join the 1st Batn. in South Africa.

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—Major Napier-Clavering, 2nd Batn., has been appointed second in command of the 1st Batn. in India, vice Major Payne, D.S.O., who has been selected for the command of the 2nd Batn. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers.

Bedfordshire Regiment (16th).—At Beggars Bush Barracks, Dublin, on Saturday last, Col. Lord Cranborne called upon the men of the 4th (Militia) Batn. to volunteer for active service in South Africa. Every man responded, and Lord Cranborne said it was only what he expected of the men of Herts.

Leicestershire Regiment (17th).—The 2nd Batn. left Queenstown on Wednesday in the Dunera for Alexandria to relieve the 2nd Batn. Royal West Kent Regiment.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. Edgeworth-Johnstone, Superintendent of Gymnasia at the Curragh, has been appointed to officiate as Assistant-Inspector of Gymnasia at Aldershot.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—The 6th (Militia) Batn. leaves the Royal Albert Docks to-day for South Africa in the Malta. Capt. Armstrong, 1st Batn., has been selected for employment with the Egyptian Army.

Cheshire Regiment (22nd).—Lieuts. Hayter and Dyer, 1st Batn., have arrived in South Africa from India for duty with the mounted infantry.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—The 2nd Batn. arrived at Cape Town, all well, in the Batavia from Southampton on Saturday last. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. is to be conveyed to South Africa in the Cheshire, which sails to-morrow.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Col. Lord Charlesmont, C.B., has placed the services of the 4th (Militia) Batn. unreservedly at the disposal of the Government for service or otherwise.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th) arrived at Cape Town, all well, in the Batavia from Southampton on Saturday last. The 3rd (Militia) Batn. is to be conveyed to South Africa in the Servia, which sails on Monday.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (33rd).—Major Marshall left England on Saturday last for South Africa to join headquarters at the front.

Border Regiment (34th).—Major Barkworth has been appointed Brigade-Major at Aldershot.

Royal Sussex Regiment (35th), on relief at Malta by the 3rd Batn. Northumberland Fusiliers, will leave in the Pavonia for South Africa. The Pavonia sails from Southampton to-day for Malta with the Fusiliers on board. The battalion has established a quarterly regimental list, the first number of which has reached us. It is published at the Malta Chronicle office, Valletta, and is edited by the second in command, who deserves the thanks of all who are or have been connected with the regiment for the care with which he has carried out his duties. We have seen many regimental publications, but this one may fairly be said to stand before all others in completeness.

Hampshire Regiment (37th).—Capt. Jackson, D.S.O., D.A.A.G., Bombay, has been granted leave from India to England for eight months on private affairs.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. leaves England to-day in the Arundel Castle for South Africa.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. leaves England to-morrow in the Majestic for South Africa. The colours of the 3rd Batn. were conveyed to Cardiff on Saturday last and placed under the care of the civil authorities. Capt. Tindal left England on Saturday last in the Canada for South Africa to join headquarters at the front.

Northamptonshire Regiment (48th).—Lieut. Stuart is a candidate for the Army Pay Department and joins at a home station on probation.

Oxfordshire Light Infantry (52nd).—Capt. Childers has left Ireland this week for South Africa with a draft of 300 to join the 1st Batn. (43rd) at the front.

Seaforth Highlanders (72nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. leaves England to-day in the Simla for Egypt to relieve the 1st Batn. Cameron Highlanders.

Black Watch (73rd).—Details will be moved from Ballater to Aberdeen on Wednesday next. 2nd Lieut. Innes has arrived home from South Africa invalided.

Highland Light Infantry (74th).—Capt. Stockwell and Lieut. Murray left for South Africa on Saturday last in the Canada to join the 1st Batn. (71st) at the front.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Lieut. Allan has left the depot and embarked this week in the Canada for South Africa to join headquarters.

Duke of Wellington's Regiment (76th).—Capt. Thursby-Pelham is a candidate for the Army Pay Department and joins at a home station on probation.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—Major Mackintosh and Capt. Bradford left England on Saturday last in the Canada for South Africa to join headquarters at the front. Lieut. Waterhouse has arrived home from South Africa invalided.

Cameron Highlanders (79th).—The 1st Batn. will be conveyed from Egypt to South Africa in the Simla, which leaves England to-day with the 3rd Batn. Seaforth Highlanders as relief. Capt. Sorel-Cameron, 1st Batn., has been selected for employment with the Egyptian Army.

South Staffordshire Regiment (80th).—Lieut. Dunlop has been appointed A.D.C. to the Lieutenant-Governor of Burma.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Brevet-Major Festing, D.S.O., Capt. Spencer and Spottiswoode (7th Batn. King's Royal Rifles, attached), Lieuts. Kennedy and Low, and 2nd Lieut. Bowen-Colthurst are en route to the Cape in the Canada, which left England on Saturday last to join headquarters at the front.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st).—Lieut. Akers-Douglas, second son of the First Commissioner of Works, had a marvellous escape at the battle of Magersfontein. He was shot in several places through the sleeve of his khaki frock and his belt was shot off, but he sustained no personal injury. During the retirement of the Highland Brigade, however, he was knocked down and rendered unconscious. He lay on the ground for some hours before he recovered, and then he managed to make his way back to camp.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (93rd).—Capt. Sutherland has been selected for employment with the Egyptian Army.

Derbyshire Regiment (95th).—Capt. Slessor has been selected for the Adjutancy of the Oxford University Volunteers, 1st V.B. Oxfordshire Light Infantry.

Royal West Kent Regiment (97th) will leave Egypt on the 24th inst. for England in the Dunera and is due at Southampton on March 4. It will go to Aldershot for mobilisation.

North Staffordshire Regiment (98th) arrived at Cape Town, all well, in the Aurania from Southampton on Saturday last.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—The 5th (Militia) Batn. will leave Southampton on Monday next in the Servia for South Africa.

King's Own Light Infantry (105th).—Lieut. Ackroyd has arrived home from South Africa invalided.

Durham Light Infantry (106th).—Capt. Luard and Lieuts. Way and Ashburner, do duty with the mounted infantry section en route from Burma to South Africa for service with the 4th Cavalry Brigade.

West India Regiment.—Lieut. Russell has been selected for employment with the Egyptian Army.

A VETERAN'S ADVICE.

BY AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

As usual I found Major von Bludwitz solacing himself with a long pipe, at his elbow the usual table littered with books, maps, a protractor, and a pair of compasses; but to my surprise the immediate object of his study was not South Africa, but a chart of the Nile regions about Khartoum and upwards.

"Ancient history, eh?" said I, seating myself. "Well, it is pleasant to think that with the fall of the Khalifa and the capture of Osman Digna all our Egyptian and Soudan troubles are laid to rest."

"So," quoth my old friend gazing at me rather whimsically from behind his pince-nez; "always optimist—well, confidence is a fine thing in the right place, no quality do I more admire; only somehow a few questions into my mind will come. See here now, is it for certain sure that in Egypt so much loyalty and affection has by you been inspired that in some possible events grave embarrassments for you may yet not there suddenly develop?"

"Good heavens!" said I, "have we not conferred every possible benefit upon Egypt and its inhabitants? Have we not redeemed its finances from bankruptcy and the fellahen from the corvée? Have we not purified its administration and secured its frontiers? Egypt is bound to us by every possible tie of self-interest, let alone gratitude—really, my dear major, I have no anxiety on that score."

"So be it," rejoined the major, "and Lord Cromer has much prescience, and General Wingate is doubtless a most competent officer, and yet—yet it does seem to me that before you send your last drummer to South Africa a little examination of the actual situation not altogether out of place may be. Of intrigue Egypt is the chronic nursery. Who knows in such a forcing ground what noxious plant may in favourable circumstances unexpectedly appear. To me, a foreigner, an outsider, as you say, regarding with a certain detachment the crisis through which your Empire now is passing, it does seem that a little forethought, possibly, inconvenient as it may be at this moment, a certain reinforcement of your English garrison not altogether unadvisable may be."

"You are not, perhaps, my good friend, so dearly beloved in Egypt as doubtless you deserve to be—it is not absolutely certain that your distant troubles may not give a signal by which your enemies may seek to profit. Alarmist! no, I would not be that—but 'forewarned is forearmed.' Your last division and your last cavalry brigade must go to South Africa. Well, your people know best—in that case perhaps a few Goorkha battalions and some Indian cavalry to Suez might meet all needs, but do not for want of a little prevision tempt fortune over much."

THE ARTILLERY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."
SIR,—Referring to my letter, which you were good enough to publish on Jan. 20, I should like to bring to notice the two following facts in confirmation of the views therein expressed, viz., the comparatively small effect of artillery fire in the field and its danger, when used at long ranges, to its own infantry. First, in the British Medical Journal of Jan. 20, there is published a report of the wounded in Gen. Hart's brigade at the repulse at Colenso, which gives a total of 309 wounded, of which only eight were by shells, less than 3 per cent. of the total. Yet we are constantly told that the Boer guns are superior to ours. Second, in the Times of Jan. 18, page 10, in the account of Gen. Gatacre's reverse, it is clearly shown that the disaster was caused in great part by our artillery firing in an uncertain light at long range on our own infantry, mistaking them for the enemy and bringing our attack to an end.

Reviews.

THE DOWNFALL OF SPAIN.

To some other excellent work Mr. H. W. Wilson has now added under this title (which we do not consider particularly happy) a naval history of the war between Spain and the United States (Sampson Low). So much has already been written upon the subject that there was room for a volume which should bring a record of the operations within moderate compass, and be written with competence and a sense of proportion. We are not sure that Mr. Wilson has closely investigated the Spanish evidences concerning the war, chiefly embodied in the proceedings of the courts-martial upon the officers who had been in chief command; but otherwise he gives an admirable picture of what occurred, and though there are a few slips, he appears to have fallen into no great errors. His volume opens with a brief account of the blowing up of the Maine in the harbour at Havana, and he takes entirely the American view of the cause of that disaster. At the same time he would absolve the Spanish authorities from complicity, for he holds that they might have been justified in placing some safe form of mine at the berth occupied by the Maine, and that presumably the unauthorised hand of some traitor caused the detonation. A chapter follows upon the strength of the two fleets, and extremely high credit is given to the officers and men of the American Navy, with the remark that the converse of all that is said was found in the Spanish personnel. Nelson, as we all know, was accustomed to express great contempt for "the Dons," and Mr. Wilson echoes his censures, without, however, in the smallest degree dissenting from the very high opinion generally held as to the high personal character and intrepidity of the Spanish officers. It would take us too long to follow Mr. Wilson's careful and lucid account of the operations, which we have no hesitation in commending very heartily. The Spanish fleet, he says, would truly have been "in being" if it had succeeded in capturing or destroying the Oregon. But Admiral Cervera was not ready to move in time, and to us it seems doubtful whether, in any case, he would have had a great chance of success. The cruise to Santiago had no real strategic purpose, and success was impossible where evasion came to be the object. Sooner or later the Spaniards were bound to be defeated, and the only wonder is that the Americans were so greatly alarmed and that the prospect of attack completely upset the plans of the Board of Strategy. Mr. Wilson draws attention to Admiral Sampson's wish to attack Havana. It seems clear that the Navy Department was perfectly right in prohibiting such an operation, for the loss or the disabling of one or two ships might have been serious at the time. It has often been said that Admiral Sampson's bombardment of San Juan, Porto Rico, was unjustifiable on the same grounds, but we remark that Mr. Wilson minimises the affair and speaks of it only as a "reconnaissance." He gives a very suggestive account of the conditions set up at Santiago as revealed by Admiral Cervera's letters, and illustrates the want of harmony between the naval and military authorities. Incidentally he discusses the somewhat curious movements of Admiral Schley. We must be content to say that the chapters upon events at Manila are as good as those which deal with the events in the West Indies. The illustrations are particularly excellent, and the plans and charts add very much to the value of the book, which is admirable in style, and good, sufficient, and capable in substance.

SOME MAGAZINES.

The magazines generally are so full of the war that it is pleasant to find that Blackwood knows how to combine lighter with more serious elements. There are some quite delightful articles in the February number which should be read. The war, of course, receives a good deal of attention, and a military writer expounds, for popular understanding, the conditions that attend the use of firearms in general, with the ballistic questions of velocity, flight, and energy. It may surprise many to read that the Lee-Metford rifle of the present day has not half the energy of the arquebuse which compassed the death of the Chevalier Bayard. The sensible remark is made that the conditions of the present war, where all probability exceptional, and that weapons suited to fighting in the open must in the future, as in the past, form the principal armament of our troops. The deadliness of these weapons is checked so soon as the enemy entrenches, but no campaign can ever be won by remaining on the defensive. The operation, in which the general contention is that we have fought with troops and a military system quite unsuitable, and have spent some millions and many soldiers' lives in learning what common sense should have taught us. A third article upon the war is occupied with the political prospects. The English Historical Review has several learned articles, of which the most interesting to us is the Rev. George Edmonson's upon the Dutch power in Brazil, including an excellent exposition of the naval conditions with which it began. In one of the notes Prof. Morris throws some doubt upon the famous story of Gen. Wolfe's reciting Gray's "Elegy" as he floated down the river St. Lawrence on the morning when he met victory and death.

Among many articles in the Edinburgh Review there is, of course, one upon the war, which consists of description mingled with criticism, the subject being treated at great length. The colonial governments and the Intelligence Department are absolved from blame, and our misfortunes are attributed, not to want of men, but to want of forethought due to very inadequate appreciation of the fighting capacity of the Boers: "Preliminaries and concentration were not in harmony, because no scheme of operations had been worked out. Had this been done, the danger of isolating a detachment at Glencoe, the insecurity of Ladysmith, and the unprotected condition of the railways would have been so strongly impressed upon the Natal Government that Sir George White would have found the whole of the field force concentrated, the stores collected at Estcourt or Pietermaritzburg, the railway bridges covered by bomb-proof blockhouses, and the 'ponts' over the river in his own hands."

It is for the proprietors of the American magazines to know how they can afford to produce numbers so well illustrated at the price. Scribner is particularly good this month, and has capital articles upon "The War in South Africa," "Oliver Cromwell," and "Life in Havana." The English Illustrated Magazine is improved, and generally the magazines keep a high level.

The United Service Magazine for the month gives first place to the seventh and last chapter of Judge O'Connor Morris's essay on Marlborough, dealing with the last campaigns and the fall of the great commander, and an account of the operations of Villars against his formidable rival and Prince Eugene in 1709, with a particular narrative of the events of what the author terms "the great and terrible battle of Malplaquet."

SHORT NOTICES.

Col. Brunker's Chart of the Boer War (W. Clowes and Sons) was soon found to be indispensable by all who were closely following the course of events in South Africa. It is wholly excellent, and many will be very glad to know that a third and enlarged edition, brought up to date, has just been issued. It contains the staffs of all units, full lists of officers, a diary of events, an estimate of the strength of available forces, particulars of the organisation and equipment of the Boers, a coloured map, &c. Nothing better can be imagined than this handbook to the war.

We have received the eighth edition, rewritten, of The Breechloader and How to Use it, by W. W. Greener (Cassell and Co.). Mr. Greener is a practical gunsmith, and thoroughly understands what he is talking about. His explanation of sporting guns is particularly good, but the book is already famous.

We have also received Social Chess (Horace Cox), by James Mason, being a little book containing a series of short and brilliant games in the style of what the late Mr. Ruskin styled "social chess," as distinguished from the severe scientific competition between professional players. It is probably true that most people will derive more pleasure from a simple game than from the arduous work of the scientific chess board, and therefore this little book may be welcome to many.

Messrs. Kegan Paul and Co. are publishing in England the series of "Beacon Biographies of Eminent Americans" now being issued at Boston, U.S.A. They are brief lives of American notabilities, consisting of less than 150 pages, very well printed and illustrated, and daintily produced. Two of them are upon our table—Robert E. Lee, by William P. Trent, and David G. Farragut, by James Barnes. The great Confederate soldier and the famous Federal seaman, whose life has been so ably told by Capt. Mahan, are thus presented in a picturesque and popular way to their many admirers.

Other little books upon our table are Sergeant Webb (Mowbray and Co., Oxford), being the story of the life of a very earnest and excellent man of the Sherwood Foresters, whose career is commended by Lord Chelmsford as an example to others; and His First Day's Work, a railway story by G. J. Bridges (Nisbet).

Mr. John Bloundelle-Burton's new novel, The Seafarers, will be published almost immediately by C. Arthur Pearson and Co. in London, and by Appleton and Co. in New York, and there will be a large edition for the colonies. In this story—which is laid in the present day—the popular author has gone to absolute facts for the main features of his story, which are concerned with the total casting away of a vessel, on board of which the crew have all been stricken by a terrible calamity that renders them powerless to control the ship. As on board this ship are also the hero, his rival, and the heroine, our readers may feel perfectly sure that Mr. Bloundelle-Burton will be quite at his best.

The council of the United Services College, Westward Ho, offer 12 exhibitions at their school of the total value of £500 per annum, to be awarded in such amounts as individual cases seem to require, in aid of the education of the sons of officers of the Navy and Army (including every corps, whether British or colonial, permanent or temporary, in the South African field force) who may either be killed in action or die on active service. This offer is retrospective as regards sons of officers killed in action or who have died on active service in India and Africa during the past five years, i.e., since Jan. 1, 1895. No exhibition will be of less value than £30 per annum. Application to be made to any of the special war fund agencies for the benefit of officers' widows and orphans; or to Rev. F. W. Tracy, head master, United Services Colleges, Westward Ho, or to Lieut.-Col. C. Russell, secretary.

BOVRIL AFTER THE BATTLE.

Sir Wm. MacCormac's

Report to the "Lancet," after the Battle of Tugela.

" We walked to the field hospitals of the 4th, 5th, and 6th Brigades, situated about three miles from Chieveley under the crest of a hillock, about 400 yards outside the fire zone. . . . Awaiting their turn the wounded were lying outside in rows which were being continually augmented by the civilian bearers coming in from the field.

" As each wounded man reached the hospital he was served with a hot cup of bovril, large cans of which were boiling outside the tents."

The above Report will be found in full in the "Lancet" of 20th ultimo, and in most of the London Daily Papers of the 19th ultimo.

THE NAVAL PROGRAMME.

IN a few days it is expected that Mr. Goschen will introduce a naval estimate, or possibly indicate in some way how the present situation is to be met from an Admiralty point of view. In either case the details of his scheme will be awaited with intense interest and even with some anxiety. It must be acknowledged that the country is right in maintaining that there shall be no relaxation of our efforts to maintain our supremacy afloat. The circumstances of the moment demand that this should be the case. But, in addition, the efforts which others are making call for further endeavours on our part to prevent us being outstripped in the race. It is just as well to recollect at this moment that we cannot extemporise a fleet, nor draw upon the patriotism of our people or the colonies for help in this direction. To make ourselves secure against even ordinary possibilities we must have a large margin of strength, for surely this is borne in upon us as one of the lessons of the war. Those responsible for national defence are, then, as it were, on their trial; they will have to show to the satisfaction of the country that they have really appreciated and understood the new conditions which have been revealed by events in South Africa and elsewhere. Confidence in the Board of Admiralty has not been shaken by the mistakes and delays which have been attributed to the Transport Department. Confidence in the Navy has rather been strengthened by the gallant actions of our bluejackets and marines in Natal and the Cape Colony. A belief prevails that the War Office officials have been drawing largely upon the stores of munitions of war which the foresight of their naval colleagues has provided, a belief which has at least good foundation in the presence of the naval guns at all the principal centres of operations. But the policy of weakening the Navy in order to provide for deficiencies of the Army may easily be carried to a point which would endanger the efficiency of the former arm. The feeling of anxiety will therefore deepen into apprehension, or worse, if it should unfortunately be demonstrated that the subject of national or, as we should prefer to call it, Imperial defence has not been considered as a whole, and with due regard to every form of protection relative to its value in the general scheme.

The fact that we have sent more than 150,000 of our troops some 7,000 miles across the sea has already had an effect which might have been anticipated, and which without clear official leading may have lamentable results. From a certain section of the public a cry has arisen, "To whom shall we look for the protection of these islands now that they are denuded of Regular troops, and the cream of the Yeomanry and Volunteers?" The replies to this question which have appeared in the press have had at least one point of similarity. Their writers have uniformly disregarded that all-important factor the Navy. It has been suggested, indeed, to mobilise our Naval Reserve and call out the Coastguard, but the advocates of these measures do not appear to have sufficient faith in their own proposals to leave well alone. They and others are full of schemes of conscription, Militia ballot, rifle clubs, compulsory military education and the like, while here and there voices are raised for the reinstitution of naval volunteers, or the establishment of various forms of so-called "coast defence." It is noteworthy that among all these advisers not one appears to calculate the cost of carrying out his suggestions or deems it worth a moment's thought. Seeing the necessity that has arisen for largely increasing our Regular forces both by land and sea, it will probably be expedient, if our military expenditure is to be kept within bounds, to limit it to this purpose. In any case if money is spent for other purposes it should only be after thorough investigation, and on something more than a mere presumption of an adequate return. We drew attention last week to a phrase in the Queen's Speech which appeared to need special notice from all who are interested—and who is not?—in the provision of effective and efficient protection for Imperial interests. We were glad to see a letter in the Times on Thursday from "Navalis" on the same subject. There is a passage in Mr. Goschen's speech on the amendment to the Address which seems to us equally remarkable and equally ominous. The First Lord was describing how Mr. Wyndham and Lord Lansdowne were elaborating plans which it was believed would place the country in the necessary state of defence. Then he went on to say, "we are working at those plans, and with the Navy as it is and those preparations the country need entertain no feelings of insecurity." Nor was this the only reference to a state of content and self-satisfaction in which the Government apparently regards the Navy "as it is," for Mr. Goschen also pointedly remarked that "while the Navy is in its present position" there is no reason for apprehension. Coupled with the baleful introduction of the phrase "coast defence" in the Queen's Speech these remarkable utterances of the First Lord of the Admiralty appear to us to indicate the possibility of a most unsatisfactory state of affairs. If Mr. Goschen is quite contented with the Navy "as it is" we may be sure that everybody else in the Cabinet will be only too happy to be of the same frame of mind, and if he has been lulled into this state of security by some promise of "coast defence," then indeed we may soon be within measurable distance of panic, and all that it means.

This week we have received the report of the Navy League for the year 1899, which is to be presented to that body in May next. We congratulate the league upon its satisfactory financial condition, and particularly so at the present moment when there are signs which appear to indicate that a great and a real demand will be made upon its services. The functions of the league are, we have been told, partly educational and partly executive. That the league has fulfilled the former rôle with marked success is evident from this report, and it appears to have fully deserved the praise of Sir Vesey Hamilton for having "got to work in public schools in order that the rising generation may not grow up as ignorant of naval affairs as their forefathers were." But the time seems to be at hand when the league may have something more to do than to teach, when its organisation will be put to the test, and it will have to show that it can originate a great movement of public opinion and thus justify its existence. If Mr. Goschen is really satisfied with the Navy "as it is" the time for teaching him and his naval advisers that the country does not share their views is at hand, and in the meantime the league might do worse than issue a little explanatory pamphlet exposing the fallacies inherent in all schemes of so-called "coast defence." As "Navalis" points out, our field army has been grossly neglected as a result of the insensate craze for fortifications, "which have been permitted to absorb millions urgently needed for objects of primary importance." That the Navy has suffered as much or more than the Army in order that sums might be lavished on "coast defence" is well known to all who have given any thought to the subject. Every one recognises that some guns may be wanted for harbour protection, but these are merely subsidiary to the defence given by the fleet. To quote "Navalis":—

"The present war has already supplied a cruel object lesson of the inevitable evils which arise from the abandonment of a primary object for the pursuit of subsidiary ends. National policy must follow the analogy of naval and military strategy. If, as we are assured, 'several other nations are perfecting their naval preparations,' every pound that we divert from the sea-going fleet and the field army to what is popularly and erroneously known as 'coast defence' deducts from the strength of the Empire. Earnestly trust, therefore, that we are not about to witness a fresh violation of first principles."

If the comfortable idea has really any foothold at the Admiralty, that because the Navy is in "its present position" we may rest on our oars, it is high time that pressure should be brought to bear to uproot it. The Times, for example, on Thursday pointed out a few directions in which progress was needed, and the list can easily be supplemented. We must wait for the official exposition of the new plans, but if it then be found that the Government is about to fail in its duty, the Navy League, with the rallying cry that in the fleet lies our only effectual means of coast defence, will find plenty of influential support for its crusade.

Naval Notes.

Mr. Goschen's explanation of the accident to the new yacht Victoria and Albert when at Pembroke Dock is, as might be expected, perfectly candid and clear. An error has occurred in connection with the calculations upon which the design of the yacht was based, many of the weights being under-estimated, while the circumstance that the masts were lengthened for the purpose of improving her appearance accentuated the unstable condition which resulted. Sir William White, who, as Mr. Goschen said, has throughout his long and distinguished career had conspicuous success in producing ships which invariably almost exactly fulfilled their design, accepts full responsibility for the mistake, for which at present he is unable to account. The matter is to form the subject of a full and careful inquiry as soon as the necessary calculations to establish the actual facts have been completed. The damage to the vessel is now being made good at Portsmouth, and the cost is to be kept separate; but until the fresh calculations are made it is not possible to say exactly what the increase to the estimate will be or what alterations will be necessary to ensure satisfactory conditions of stability. The First Lord promises that the greatest care shall be taken to interfere as little as possible with either the comfort or appearance of the vessel, or with her efficiency in any way. It seems probable that the masts and funnels may have to be shortened, and a large quantity of silicate cotton which had been used for the purpose of deadening sound will have to be removed, as well as some part of the upper works. On the voyage round from Pembroke with 270 tons of coal and 550 tons of ballast on board she showed herself to be an excellent sea-boat, so that it is to be hoped that no very radical alteration will be necessary.

The Channel Squadron has left Portland for Berehaven in order to carry out some exercises there before proceeding on its cruise. The opportunity will probably be taken to make a further demand for the commissioning of the ships of the first Reserve at their full strength. We cannot see that there is any occasion for such a step, and trust that the Government will not allow their hands to be forced by any panic cry or demand. To proceed to any act of mobilisation at the present time would not only upset the arrangements of training classes at the educational establishments, but it would also dislocate trade in a manner which is quite uncalled for at the present time. Not only this, but the coastguardmen would have to be called out, and the expense would be very heavy without any corresponding return sufficiently valuable to warrant such a proceeding. Those who are demanding a mobilisation, and the calling up of all the reservists and pensioners, seem to forget that in addition to the men under training in the schools this would affect from 30,000 to 35,000 persons, if not a larger number, and that even if war were declared against us by some European Power, it would not be necessary to draw upon all these reserves immediately.

Some experiments which are bound to be interesting, and should give valuable results, are to be carried out shortly by the officers of the Vernon at Portsmouth. These experiments will be instituted for the purpose of endeavouring to establish by means of a balloon wireless telegraphic communication between vessels at sea and the shore. The French have frequently used balloons at sea for reconnoitring, and the Germans also experimented in this direction both with ships and torpedo-boats. In this country, however, we have not yet used the balloon in our Navy, and it appears to be still uncertain whether it is now intended to utilise the services of the balloon afloat. If it be true that Signor Marconi has arrived at the conclusion that it is unnecessary to have the receiver at a height above the deck, it is possible that messages may be taken in afloat without recourse to the services of a balloon. On the other hand, it would appear desirable to have something of the kind if it is proposed to reply to the messages thus received. According to the Times experiments at Portsmouth will be conducted by Lieutenant Arnold-Forster. It may also be mentioned in this direction that it is by no means certain that in the Marconi system we have the best possible. The Trinity House is said to have been offered another method, and the Americans are now making trials with a third, described as of very simple construction.

The annual meetings of the Institution of Naval Architects will begin on April 4 in the hall of the Society of Arts, and the Earl of Hopetoun will preside. The council of the institution has resolved to present a gold medal to any person, not being a member or associate member of the council, who shall at the spring meeting read a paper which in the judgment of the council shall be deemed to be of exceptional merit. The council has also expressed its willingness to present a premium of books or instruments to the reader of any paper, not being a member or associate member of the council, which paper shall in the judgment of the council merit this distinction. The annual dinner of the institution will take place in the evening of the opening day of the meeting at the Hotel Cecil.

Admiral Sir George Elliot and Captain R. B. Nicholls in recent letters to the Morning Post advocate the re-establishing the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers, which force it is assumed, had it not been disbanded, would now have had an available strength of nearly 25,000 officers and men. The latter officer, who is a prominent member of the Navy League, emphasises the necessity for such a measure from the paucity of the Royal Naval Reserve, whose ranks are weakened by the unusual number of aliens in the mercantile marine. The Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers might undoubtedly have been an important addition to the personnel of the Navy had it not become clear to authority that its continued existence involved certain disabilities and disadvantages for which its possible value was not sufficient compensation. It would be more beneficial to the country, we believe, if these officers turned their energies in another direction. Captain Nicholls asks if our Navy is ready in case of a national emergency. Mr. Goschen in his speech in the House of Commons on Friday in last week assured the public of its efficiency, and that his department is conscious of the responsibility devolving on it in regard to the service afloat. We should have a better chance of forming an estimate of the value of this assertion in a very few days.

The rumour that a firm in Cardiff has contracted to supply some foreign Government with 400,000 tons of the best Welsh coal does not appear to have been confirmed, and whether the statement be correct or not, Mr. Goschen was able to assure General Russell that the Admiralty had made provision for a sufficient supply of coal for naval requirements in any emergency. That the subject is an important one is unquestionable, and we are not surprised that Mr. Trower, the chairman of the Executive Committee of the Navy League, should have thought it necessary to appeal both to members of Parliament and the public generally to press upon the Government the necessity of taking steps to prevent large quantities of stores so essential to the efficiency of the fleet from passing out of the country into the hands of possible enemies. Mr. Trower says:—

"Smokeless coal is the breath of empire. There is no substitute. Its use confers on the admiral of a fleet possessing it advantages over a fleet compelled to use smoky coal only comparable to the relative advantages of smokeless powder over the ordinary black variety. Except the Pocahontas coal measures in Virginia, there is virtually no other source of supply outside Great Britain. The practical monopoly of smokeless coal which would be obtained by our fleets if its sale were forbidden under the supreme law that governs wise nations and common-sense men is a prospective reinforcement of our natural strength in time of war too obvious to need comment."

Whether it be necessary to take such a step as is here indicated and altogether prohibit the exportation of smokeless coal we cannot say, and in all probability only the Government and the naval advisers in its confidence would be able to determine. But we hope there would be no hesitation in taking such a measure if it became necessary in the public interest.

Admiral Field, M.P., asked, on behalf of Commander Oliver Young, on Monday last, if despatches had been received from the officers commanding naval brigades, descriptive of their proceedings at the battles of Graspan and Colenso; if so, when would they be published, the same as the military reports on those actions. The First Lord admitted their receipt at the Admiralty, but as they came through the naval Commander-in-Chief at the Cape it was uncertain whether the generals in command during such engagements were acquainted with their contents; he had, therefore, telegraphed for information and hoped that their publication would soon follow. We are aware that all ranks of the naval service are anxious for accounts of their comrades engaged at the front.

Writing to a contemporary under date January 4, Captain E. P. Jones, of the cruiser Forte, furnishes a complete list of the officers then serving in the naval brigade with the Natal Field Force. This brigade, under Captain Jones, seems to be a purely naval force consisting of guns' crews. There were in all twenty guns at the date in question, of which eighteen were 12pr. field guns and the remaining two 4.7in. on Captain Scott's mountings. Captain Jones alludes to the mistake commonly made in the press that the 4.7in. guns landed in Africa came from the Terrible. These guns, he writes, have in nearly all cases been drawn from the dockyard at Simon's Bay. The officers originally in charge of guns under Captain Jones included the following: Lieutenants James (Tartar), Halsey (Philomel), Steel (Forte), and Ogilvie (Terrible). The officers who have joined the brigade since are as under. From the Forte: Lieutenant Hunt, Staff Surgeon Lilley, Lieutenant Melville, and Gunner Holland. From the Terrible: Commander Limpus, Lieutenants Richards, England, and Wylde, Surgeons Lomas and MacMillan, Engineer Arthur, Gunners Cole, Wright, and Williams, and Midshipmen Willoughby, Boldero, Down, Troup, Hutchinson, Ackland, Sherwin, Whyte, Hanwright, and Hodson. From the Philomel: Lieutenants Halsey, Deas, and Burne, Sub-Lieutenant Clutterbuck, and Clerk Hollins. From the Tartar: Sub-Lieutenant Newcombe and Engineer Murray.

An interesting case arising out of the Sans Pareil collision, which occurred at 11.10 p.m. on August 7, 1899, was tried before Mr. Justice Gorell Barnes this week. The action is brought by the owners of the vessel which was run down. The importance of the case is due to the fact that the question is raised of the right of merchantmen to cross or pass through the lines of a fleet of men-of-war in motion. The facts are not substantially in dispute, but the Attorney-General contended that the East Lothian and her tug were under no necessity to pass through the fleet, and it was faulty navigation for them to do so. They must be to blame for not paying due regard to the special circumstances of the case and for omitting to take proper precautions. The plaintiff was also to blame for allowing her tug to exhibit a misleading steering light in breach of the regulations. Mr. Joseph Walton, for the plaintiff, contended that the breach of the regulations with respect to the steering light could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision, which was due to defective look-out in the Sans Pareil. The light was not misleading. There was no obligation on the plaintiff to avoid passing through the fleet. The Attorney-General replied. At the conclusion of the arguments the court reserved judgment.

The members of the Royal Navy Club, 1765-85, dined at the Whitehall Rooms, Hôtel Métropole, on the 6th inst., to commemorate "Founders' Day." Rear-Admiral Ernest N. Rolfe, C.B., presided, and the guest of the evening was Major-General the Hon. H. F. Eaton. There were present:—

Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam has added a mural tablet to Dromore Cathedral in memory of his distinguished father, the third Earl, who will be remembered by those who served under his gallant son's command during the first commission of the Hercules.

Admiral Sir Henry Fairfax, Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, is not, for the present, to have his official residence remodelled and enlarged as suggested by his predecessor, Admiral the Hon. Sir E. R. Fremantle, and officially endorsed by the Admiralty. The admiral's secretary has been provided a residence and offices for his clerks in an adjacent house purchased for the purpose by their Lordships. The Commander-in-Chief will conduct his official duties in that building, and the portion of his house hitherto used for offices, waiting-rooms, &c., will be adapted to domestic requirements. When the money can be spared (!) the original alterations will be carried out; but as the amount involved is not considerable it is a mistake to defer the work, as it is well known that the port-admiral's house of the Western Command compares unfavourably with those of his brother flag officers at other home stations.

Admiral F. Anstruther Herbert, although well in the seventies of life, was able to leave Southampton in the Union steamship German on Saturday last for a cruise to Teneriffe.

Vice-Admiral Sir F. G. D. Bedford left Granada for Trinidad in his flagship, the Crescent, on Wednesday last.

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford arrived at Genoa on Saturday last and embarked in the Venus the same day for Malta, where he arrived on Monday and relieved Rear-Admiral Sir Gerard Noel, second in command of the Mediterranean fleet. The latter officer left for Naples in the Royal Sovereign on Wednesday for England. Lord Charles's flagship, the Ramilles, will be replaced by the Goliath during the current year.

Rear-Admiral Bouverie F. Clark, Director of Transports at the Admiralty, has undoubtedly great difficulty in securing proper steam-vessels to convey additional troops and horses to South Africa. This has given rise to questions in Parliament relative to the delay in sending off the Imperial Yeomanry. It is therefore gratifying to see that the Marquis of Lansdowne on Tuesday last in no way attributed it to the department controlled by the gallant admiral.

Captain Sir Richard Poore's appointment from the Illustrious to the Royal Naval Barracks, Devonport, implies that there is no prospect of Captain H. T. Grenfell, the present holder of that command, obtaining flag rank before the 9th prox., the day on which he attains the age of fifty-five, and must, in consequence, be compulsorily retired. Sir Richard's seniority entitles him to such an appointment, and it is in every way advantageous to the Service that an officer of his ability should be offered a position where tact and judgment are necessary in dealing with the large and varied body of men that serve at the general depot. Of his services we need only point out that he has belonged to four different naval brigades, and on each occasion managed a very large amount of hard work.

Captain Leslie C. Stuart, of the Tauranga, pays off that cruiser into the Reserve at Sydney, N.S.W., and returns home. Captain F. St. G. Rich commissions the Ringarooma in her place on the Australian Station. Captain F. C. Noel, who recently relieved Captain A. M. Farquhar, pays off and recommissions the Wallaroo. Captain Henry Leah, of the Mildura, pays off that vessel, and, having served three years abroad, returns to England in command of the Diana. Captain H. C. A. Baynes, who brings out the latter vessel, recommissions the Mildura. The reliefs will be effected by the Europa and Diana.

Captain J. E. Bearcroft, of the Philomel, commanding the naval forces at the Modder River, has informed Rear-Admiral Sir R. Harris, his Commander-in-Chief, that it is the unanimous wish of the men of his brigade that the generous gift of £100 sent by the Mayor of Portsmouth as a Christmas present shall be devoted to their comrades who were incapacitated for further service by wounds received in action, as well as the absolutely dependent relatives of those who were killed.

Captain A. W. E. Prothero, of the Arrogant, left Plymouth on Friday in last week to relieve Captain L. A. Wintz, of the Furious, on patrol duty at Las Palmas, instead of proceeding to Bantrey Bay with other vessels of the Channel fleet.

Captain H. C. A. Baynes, after paying off the Latona on Thursday last, commissions the Diana on Thursday next to convey relief crews to Australia, and on arrival at Sydney takes command of the Mildura.

Captain P. F. Tillard, appointed last week to the Dido, was mentioned, on returning from command of the Magicienne at Sierra Leone last summer, as the future flag captain to Vice-Admiral Sir J. A. Fisher in the Mediterranean. It does not appear, however, that the intention is to be realised. Captain the Hon. Hedworth Lambton, of the Powerful, was chief of the staff-elect for the same station, but, being unfortunately locked up at Ladysmith, it is uncertain when he will be able to assume that important appointment. In the meantime the Commander-in-Chief of the largest fleet in the world carries out the duties of his station without the addition to his retinue that was so strongly advocated after the loss of the ill-fated Victoria.

Captain H. N. Dudding, of the Iphigenia, returns to Portsmouth with that cruiser to pay off on being relieved by Captain H. C. Reynolds, of the Pique.

Captain Percy M. Scott, of the Terrible, commanding at Durban, has transported a 47in. gun, mounted on one of his special carriages, by rail to Chieveley.

Commander Cortland H. Simpson recommissions the Egeria, surveying vessel on the Pacific Station, Captain Morris H. Smyth, at present in command, having completed three years' service in her. Commander Simpson is son of a retired vice-admiral, who, although he had not the opportunity of serving as flag officer, was successful in his career of thirty-eight years. He was largely engaged in suppressing the West African slave trade from the early part of his active service until the traffic was virtually extinct, and made several important captures. His son, who has invariably worked hard and displayed good ability as a surveyor, has not at the age of forty-five attained captain's rank, which possibly might have come to him at an earlier period had he not devoted himself to science.

Lieutenant P. J. Tillard, relieved from command of the Cormorant and torpedo boats at Gibraltar, and Lieutenant W. S. Bowman, relieved from the Minerva, after three years' service in their respective appointments, arrived on Saturday last at Plymouth in the Wye.

Fleet-Surgeons G. J. Irvine and H. T. Cox have been promoted Deputy Inspectors-General of Hospitals in the vacancies caused by the death and retirement respectively of Deputy Inspectors-General Hay and Martin. Mr. Irvine obtains his step by seniority, but Mr. Cox has the good fortune to be selected in preference to five of his seniors, two of whom have distinguished services. As it has recently been rumoured that promotion to the higher ranks of the naval medical service would be awarded those who had displayed exceptional skill in surgery, probably Mr. Cox's services in naval hospitals have contributed to his advantage.

Staff-Surgeon W. E. Home, relieved from the Tamar, after two years' service at Hong Kong, arrived home by the P. and O. steamship Japan on Friday in last week.

Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel Townley W. Dowding, R.M.L.I. (supplementary half pay), Inspector of Marine Recruiting, has been brought on the establishment as Second Commandant, vice Colonel H. S. G. Schomberg, promoted Commandant, and placed on the supernumerary list to continue his recruiting duties, which he has undoubtedly carried out hitherto with great advantage to the Royal Marine forces. In the present state of the corps list Colonel Dowding should be promoted Commandant in October next, from which rank he will probably be retired at the expiration of three years in that appointment.

Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel R. P. Coffin, R.M.L.I., obtains promotion to Second Commandant, vice Dowding, at the age of fifty-three, and will according to the present roster become Commandant December, 1901, eventually retiring therefrom after the usual period, unless exceptional vacancies place him on the active list of general officers.

Lieut.-Colonel C. B. G. Dick, manager of the theatre of the Plymouth Division, R.M.L.I., assisted by Captains F. R. Godfrey and L. W. Miller, and Lieutenants G. R. S. Hickson and B. C. S. Waller, R.M.L.I., gave a theatrical performance at headquarters, Stonehouse, last Monday and Tuesday in support of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association, officers' branch. Several ladies and officers of the Western District assisted in this desirable object.

Major H. W. L. Holman, R.M.L.I., of the Naval Intelligence Department, has been granted an extension of service without appointment.

Captain H. la T. Darley, R.M.L.I., embarks in the Edgar on the 20th inst. at Devonport in command of detachments of Royal Marine forces proceeding to and returning from China.

Captain J. A. Tupman, R.M.L.I., of the Niobe, relieves Captain H. D. Palmer, R.M.L.I., as Adjutant at the Royal Marine Depot, the latter officer having accepted an appointment in the Egyptian Army. Captain C. E. F. Drake-Brockman, R.M.L.I., takes Captain Tupman's place in the Niobe.

Lieutenant W. T. C. Jones, R.M.L.I., late of the naval brigade with Lord Methuen's force, who was wounded at Enslin in November last, arrived at Southampton in the White Star steamship Majestic on Saturday last.

THE NAVIES OF FRANCE, GERMANY, AND ENGLAND.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Capt. Mahan, in his classical monograph on the influence of sea power upon history, very distinctly states "That it is so far an open question which of the military navies of France or of England is the more powerful. Practically, France and England are of equal strength in material for a sea war." Published on Jan. 25, the new German Navy Bill proposes not alone almost to double the number of its battleships and armed cruisers, but also to actually add nearly 34,000 men to the personnel of its military navy. What is to be the English prospective programme to keep pace with our foreign rivals?

Last week we dealt with the German ship-building programme chiefly in relation to the general conditions that attended its presentation to the Reichstag. As we have explained, there are to be two double squadrons. These, including two flagships, will comprise thirty-four battleships, with eight large and twenty-four small cruisers and eighty torpedo-boats, in addition to one battleship for every squadron, and one torpedo-boat for every division as a reserve in case vessels should be lost or disabled. The complete scheme for the laying down of ships extends up to the year 1917. It is estimated that before that time seventeen battleships, ten large and twenty-nine small cruisers, and twelve divisions of torpedo-boats will have become obsolete. In this list are included some of the newest vessels now afloat and some cruisers which are even yet on the stocks. As the ships in question become superannuated others are to be laid down to take their places.

This work will, of course, be quite independent of the contemplated increase, which involves the laying down, within the same period, of eleven battleships, eight large and sixteen small cruisers, and four divisions of torpedo-boats. Therefore, in the year 1917 the German fleet is to consist of twenty-eight battleships, eighteen large cruisers, forty-five of smaller classes, and sixteen divisions of torpedo-boats built or laid down. The average annual expenditure upon shipbuilding and armament will be 87,600,000 marks. Step by step with the increase of the matériel of the fleet the strength of the personnel is to be augmented, and by the year 1920, when the last of the contemplated ships should have been launched, the total addition will have been 35,551, or at the rate of 1,776 yearly. The augmentation will consist of 1,212 executive officers, 283 engineers, 188 medical officers, 122 paymasters, and 33,746 men.

The proposals of the French Government are also very interesting, and manifestly the object is to secure greater continuity of policy. It is very important, says the projet de loi, that the programme should be voted once for all, in order that the fleet may attain homogeneity and that the private shipbuilding yards may be assured of continuous work, while greater economy would result than is the case with the piece-meal policy now pursued. The programme does not bear the impress of the ideas propounded by M. Lockroy and his friends, but is the outcome of the deliberations of the Superior Council of the Navy, which, in 1896, in 1898, and again last November, decided that France needs twenty-eight battleships (forming four squadrons of six ships each, and including four now growing obsolete), twenty-four armoured cruisers (eight divisions, each of three ships), fifty-two destroyers or torpedo gunboats, and 263 torpedo-boats, with thirty-eight submarines or submersibles. In order to complete this establishment it is necessary to lay down six battleships, five armoured cruisers, twenty-eight destroyers, 112 torpedo-boats, and twenty-six submarine vessels. The expenditure will in all be about £30,000,000, and will be spread over a period extending up to 1907. Considerable progress will, however, have been made by the year 1905.

The account given of the type of battleship adopted is instructive. A displacement of 14,865 tons has been decided upon. The plans were prepared by M. Bertin, and adopted after long discussion and after considering complaints which have been made by certain admirals in regard to the armament and protection of existing vessels as compared with those built abroad. "Most rigorous trials have made it clear that it is impossible to unite in one ship sufficient speed and range of action with proper protection and armament of adequate value without having recourse to large dimensions. It is through ignoring or not recognising this scientific fact that we have constructed battleships inadequately armed, less satisfactorily protected, and less stable than certain similar ships built for foreign navies, and that we have put in hand armoured cruisers whose armament and protection may appear insufficient." It is upon these grounds that a battleship of great displacement and an armoured cruiser of 12,600 tons will be the types of the vessels intended to be constructed. In order to justify the decision the Minister cites the example of England, Russia, and Japan.

It is scarcely to be supposed, however, that the clamorous party of the jeune école will be satisfied with his arguments, and we may be quite sure that the battle of the types will be waged again. The Minister, in fact, proceeds in his memorandum to forestall, as it were, some of the things that are likely to be said. He remarks that it is not only for the protection of ports and for general engagements that battleships are required. They are equally necessary to support the cruisers in their operations against smaller vessels in such waters as the Mediterranean and the Channel, and he adds that those officers who advance so forcibly the value of the guerre de course recognise that the success of the commerce-destroying vessels in the open seas can only be depended upon if they are sustained by larger ships upon which they can retire. Such officers, he says, even assign to slower battleships the duty of facilitating the issue and return of commerce-destroyers by diversions made against the blockaders. In this way the projet de loi argues against the disciples of Admiral Aube, and proceeds to show how the big cruiser will even fall into their schemes.

One of the most perfect field glasses we have yet seen is the Goerz Trieder binocular, which is entirely different both in make and in principle to anything hitherto submitted. The purpose of all such glasses is, of course, to render every detail of a distant field of observation distinct. This the Goerz Trieder binoculars certainly do. We strongly recommend officers going to the front to test these glasses, for they appear to fulfil every requirement.

RANGOON.NOTICE.—The Commissioners for the Port of Rangoon require the services of a Royal Naval Officer (on active service) of the rank of Lieutenant of eight years' seniority at least, or of an officer of the Royal Indian Marine of similar standing, to undertake the duties of Deputy Conservator of the Port.A thorough practical knowledge of Hydrographical surveying is an absolutely indispensable
requirement in the officer holding the appointment,
as he will have personally to carry out periodical
surveys of the Rangoon River and its approaches, with the help of a native assistant, to whom he will be expected to impart instruction in any part of the latter's duties in which he may find his training defective.The principal duties of the officer appointed will,
however, be the control of the pilots and harbour-masters, the buoying and marking of the river, the berthing of the shipping, &c., &c.; in other words, the Marine Executive control of the Port, under the Commissioners. In these duties he will have the help of the Assistant Conservator, a certificated and experienced master in the Mercantile Marine.The salary of the appointment is Rs. 300 a month, rising in four years to Rs. 1,000 a month, by annual increments of Rs. 50 for approved service. This rate of pay is inclusive of house allowance and all other allowances except exchange compensation
allowance. The officer appointed will be required to live as near the river as possible.Applications, stating particulars of service, experience, and age, should be addressed to the undersigned so as to reach Rangoon on or before May 1,
1900.A. B. GATHERER,
Chairman, Port Commissioners,
Rangoon, December 23, 1899.PUBLIC APPOINTMENT.—The SERVICES of a retired Naval Officer, not above the rank of Commander, are REQUIRED as SUPERINTENDENT for the "Wasp" Training
Ship; salary £300 per annum; age not to exceed 47.
Particulars of the duties may be obtained at the Marine Society's Office, Clark's Place, Bishopsgate Street, E.C.—Applications, stating age, together with certificates and testimonials, should be addressed to the Secretary as above not later than Feb. 20.

A REVOLUTION IN FURNISHING

BY MONTHLY PAYMENTS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., in "TRUTH," writes:—"NORMAN & STACEY have introduced in their business an ingenious safeguard against the risk of loss to his widow or family through the death of the hirer. THEY GIVE AN IN-SURANCE UPON HIS LIFE, so that if, for instance, a man gets £200 worth of furniture on the hire-purchase system, and dies when instalments to the amount of £190 have been paid,
not only does the furniture become the property of his representatives, BUT THE £190 IS ALSO REPAID TO THEM."N.B.—Cash buyers are also given a Free Life

Those marked * are twin-screw steamers.
These fast mail Steamers, built by Messrs. Harland and Wolff, of Belfast, have their accommodation amidships, are supplied with electric light throughout, are fitted with mechanical ventilation and refrigerators, and carry a surgeon and stewardess. Every possible comfort for first-class passengers only.

This route has proved itself the quickest and easiest to Burma, as passengers via Marseilles are landed regularly in Colombo and Rangoon respectively on the 18th and 33rd day after leaving London.

THE GOVERNMENT'S PROPOSALS.

THE statements so anxiously awaited by all classes of the community as to the intentions of the Government under the head of military defence were made in both Houses of Parliament on Monday last. No one who knows anything at all about modern armies can profess to be satisfied with the programme of the Government as it stands. At the same time allowances have to be made, and soldiers will be the first to make those allowances, for Ministers who found themselves driven into a corner by the circumstances of the present war and were obliged to do something, on the spur of the moment, to meet the almost unanimous demand of the public for an increase of numbers and improvement of war material. The programme of the Government shows on the face of it that it has been hastily put together. This being the case it would be unfair to take it too seriously and dwell on its manifest defects. As a first instalment in the direction of improvement in our military condition it will be accepted with thankfulness, but in this sense only can it satisfy those who have studied the subject of war with even ordinary attention. The man in the street knows better than to suppose that a scheme of this kind will meet the pressing requirements of a wealthy and scattered empire like ours. To tell him that it will do so would be to write him down a fool, which, whatever he has been in the past, he is not now, after the cruel awakening he has had during the last three months. Already it is clearly indicated by the verdict of all sections of the lay press that the indignation of the taxpayer is fairly aroused, and that any half measures of Army augmentation and reform will be indignantly rejected by a sober-minded and practical people, who have begun to recognise how little confidence is to be placed in the assurances of those of their representatives at St. Stephen's, who have for years been satisfied to vote with any government which would pledge itself to keep down estimates. It has been to this miserable and pettifogging policy that all our disasters in South Africa are due, and no amount of platform eloquence, we are glad to think, will be of avail for some time to come in persuading sensible men otherwise.

It may suit the purpose of some, of course, who put personal and party interests before every other consideration, to endeavour to make out that other causes have been at work to bring about the crisis in which the nation finds itself; but the one and primary cause of all mischief, we assert, has been false economy. In saying this we are not alone, for our critics of the Continent see matters in the same light, and express astonishment that any body of intelligent statesmen should have been found to pass year after year Army Estimates which have been glaringly inadequate, having regard to the fact that they provided for the requirements of a system in which enforced military obligation forms no part. We have to recognise, as we say, that the War Office proposals are more or less a makeshift. Indeed, Mr. Wyndham admitted this on Monday. We cannot afford, as he truly remarked, to throw our whole military system into the melting pot whilst engaged in the first big campaign of the last forty years. Nevertheless, something was absolutely necessary to be done to satisfy the country that the Government is alive to the military barrenness of the land. The Government proposals are simply emergency measures, and it would be the height of folly to regard them in any other light. As Mr. Wyndham explained, our military establishments are required just now to fulfil three purposes: First, to supply the waste caused by battle and disease in the ranks of the Army in the field, and to reinforce the Indian and foreign stations; secondly, to provide home garrisons; thirdly, to furnish a force which would be able to strike at the enemy wherever he was found. For the first and third duties we are to depend mainly, though by no means entirely, upon an increased Army of Regulars; for the second, chiefly upon what the War Office hopes to make an improved and augmented force of Auxiliaries. These are the two leading features of the Government scheme, and it will be seen that a most praiseworthy attempt has been made—but it is only an attempt be it remembered—to grapple with both without in either case embarking upon a violent departure from existing arrangements such as even the Militia ballot would be.

To summarise as briefly as possible the steps which it is suggested that we should take to increase our Regular Army, it is proposed, first and foremost, that we should at once proceed to create a number of new field batteries. To the Royal Horse Artillery seven are to be given, to the Royal Field Artillery thirty-six. Four new line cavalry regiments are to be raised, though as it would appear by the rather doubtful expedient of reducing numbers. Twelve new battalions of infantry are to be added, and there is furthermore a proposed increase in the Royal Engineers and Army Service Corps. These new units are to be made up by means of men left at home by corps now on active service, by inducements offered to old soldiers to rejoin, and by recruiting, which is now, fortunately, very brisk. The Militia is to be embodied as a whole at the earliest possible date, for three months at least, and this splendid force, which has so long been systematically discouraged and made to feel itself a veritable nobody's child, is in future, we rejoice to say, to be treated properly and raised to the position we have always urged that it should fill—of a real and effective reserve to the Army. Every possible endeavour is to be made to bring it up to its full establishment. Its rank and file are to receive the same pay as line soldiers, whilst its officers are to be properly educated and are to be made to feel themselves soldiers in something more than name. The Yeomanry are to be encouraged to become good mounted infantry instead of indifferent cavalry. Volunteer artillery are to be taken seriously in hand. As a first step it is intended to issue to them up-to-date guns. Batteries of position are to be armed with 4.7in. guns, and some of the batteries with guns of the most modern type. Commissions in the Army are to be offered on more liberal terms to officers of the Auxiliary forces, and a Volunteer reserve is to be created.

Such are the Government proposals, and he would be a captious critic indeed who would find fault with them in all the circumstances in which they are submitted. It is not to be supposed that they will be regarded as a final settlement of all the difficulties and all the needs of our military position, but Lord Lansdowne deserves credit at least for having laid down certain general lines of policy which cannot fail to commend themselves to those who are sensible of our military wants, which have recently been made so apparent as to have roused the whole nation to a feeling of righteous indignation against their legislators at St. Stephen's, who have for years been satisfied to pass annual estimates without troubling themselves to think of consequences so long as no serious questions were raised to jeopardise their seats and prove their unfitness to represent national interests in an Imperial Parliament. We are ready to admit that we see much in these proposals of the Government which is open to question, not to say objection, but the present is scarcely the moment for raising side issues, more particularly after what Mr. Wyndham said on Tuesday, when in committee on the Army Estimates he took steps to remove erroneous impressions created by his explanations of the previous evening. We believe the scheme to have been conscientiously prepared in the best interests of the nation—if it can be considered to its interest that it should still put off the evil day, as some think it would be, when it will have to face the unpleasant fact that liability to service is the one and only means by which its prosperity can be maintained. Evidently, from the remarks of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman on Monday, a large number of our legislators are still unprepared for any real measure of national self-protection, and it is unfortunately the case that politicians of the easy-going type always carry weight with the more flabby section of the community. We have to take the present proposals as they stand, and it is the duty of soldiers to accept what, after all, is but a tentative scheme of reform in the spirit in which it is offered. There will be time enough to examine its many weak points when our military authorities have been afforded an opportunity of perfecting it in detail. The Government doubtless knows—we do not—how far it is prepared to go in a financial sense in order to secure the object it has in view, the staving off of compulsory service. We quite appreciate the difficulties of the position in which it is placed. We should be sorry, therefore, to add to those difficulties, recognising as we do the incalculable injury which is invariably done by irresponsible talk and ill-considered criticism. So long as people with the enormous interests that we have at stake resist, and pride themselves on resisting, all forms of enforced service, and go out of their way to assume an air of superiority in consequence, they cannot complain if a government placed in the position that ours is at the present moment does its best to produce what it so urgently requires, a more or less mobile and efficient Army on the most antiquated principles. This is what Lord Lansdowne has been asked to do, and has done, all things considered, to the best of human ability we are disposed to think, much as we question the ultimate success of some of the proposals to which the War Office is committed.

THE MILITARY SITUATION SOUTH AFRICA.

BEHIND the impenetrable veil of the censor events have rapidly matured in the British camp at Modder River, and at length that for which all have long and ardently wished has taken place. On Thursday morning the gratifying news was published that Lord Roberts had invaded the Orange Free State from the west and that five Boer laagers had been captured by General French, whilst yesterday came the news that Kimberley had been relieved. The operations commenced with the advance on Sunday last of a brigade of mounted infantry under Colonel Hannay from Orange River Station to Ramdam, a hamlet on the Riet River, twelve miles due south of Jacobsdal. Colonel Hannay reached and held the point, encountering but slight opposition. On Monday General French with the cavalry division seized De Keil's Drifts on the Riet, apparently about eighteen miles south-east of Jacobsdal, and prepared the way for the passage of the 6th and 7th Infantry Divisions, which crossed and encamped on the right bank of the river on Tuesday. On the morning of the same date General French pushed on from the drifts across the open veldt with three brigades of cavalry, horse artillery, mounted infantry, and colonial contingents, and forced a passage at Klip Drift on the Modder River, twenty-five miles to the north, turning the Boer position at Jacobsdal. He occupied the hills north of the drift and captured three of the enemy's laagers. At the same time Lieut.-Colonel Gordon, 15th Hussars who had just arrived from India, with another mounted brigade seized Roudevaal Drift, four miles to the west, as well as an intermediate drift, and captured two more laagers. This brilliant operation was carried out in excessive heat accompanied by a blinding dust storm, which probably aided in its success. Owing to the unexpected character and celerity of the movement it met with but slight opposition on the part of the enemy, who were wholly unprepared to meet an attack from that quarter. On Wednesday the two infantry divisions advanced northwards from the Riet in support of the cavalry. By this able strategical move Lord Roberts has placed a force of about 30,000 men in rear of General Cronje's positions lying between Spytfontein and Modder River, cutting the enemy's direct line of communications with Bloemfontein. The splendid achievement by which Kimberley has been relieved will have the effect of further enhancing the reputation which General French has made for himself during the present war.

The operations on the western border should exercise an immediate and powerful influence over the entire theatre of war. The successes recorded during the last two days come opportunely after the recent disappointment caused by the withdrawal from Vaal Krantz. So far as Natal is concerned it is incumbent on us to resume our former attitude of patient waiting on events, bearing in mind that henceforth the operations in the several spheres of action should be looked at with reference to each other, and according to their respective degrees of importance relatively to the main advance. As was to be expected, the failure of General Buller's last attempt to break through to Ladysmith has produced much elation in the Boer Army, and has been followed by increased aggressiveness. A strong commando was lately reported south of the Tugela within an hour's ride of Chieveley, and cavalry skirmishes took place on Monday and Tuesday with the enemy, beyond the eastern and western flanks of the British camps at Chieveley and Springfield. The first accounts of Sir Redvers Buller's recent operation having been rather vague, a brief recapitulation in the light of more accurate knowledge will not be out of place. We have been made aware that the reason—no doubt sufficient and convincing—that determined him to withdraw from Vaal Krantz was the impossibility of either making the position secure by entrenchments, or of subduing the superior heavy gun-fire by which it was dominated. On the 5th inst. General Wynne's brigade, supported by six batteries, advancing from Potgieter's Drift, made a feint attack on the front of the Boer position on the Brakfontein hills, which lay across the road passing by Dewdorp to Ladysmith. At the same time General Lyttelton's and Hildyard's brigades were so disposed as to induce the belief that they were intended to support General Wynne, whose batteries became soon hotly engaged with the Boer artillery. The engineers, working under a heavy gun-fire, had promptly thrown a pontoon bridge across the river at Munger's Drift, a place, like many another of interest in the war, not named on the maps, but lying presumably about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Potgieter's Drift. From this point General Lyttelton's brigade, covered by the naval guns on Zwart Kop, and by a heavy field-artillery fire, made the real attack. Crossing by the pontoons he advanced due north against the Vaal Krantz ridge and gallantly carried the heights, the 1st Batn. Durham Light Infantry leading. On the day following the Boers, strongly reinforced, made a determined attempt to recover the hill, but were repulsed at every point. After its capture the real character of the position became revealed. It was seen to be commanded from the west by the guns on Spion Kop, from the east by masked batteries of heavy ordnance, discovered by balloon observations, concealed among the crags of Doorn Kloof, while on the left front rose the Brakfontein ridges strongly entrenched and armed. Accordingly on the night of Wednesday, the 7th inst., the troops were withdrawn in perfect order. The crossing had been expected by the enemy at Skiet's Drift, a point a few miles to the east lying directly under the masked guns of Doorn Kloof, on which the Boers were massed to repel the assault. It is evident therefore, that a well-planned advance had been made with conspicuous success and with slight loss into the very heart of the Tugela lines, and it is much to be regretted that the accumulating obstacles should have proved insurmountable. Thus has the third attempt to reach Ladysmith failed, and chiefly owing to the same dominating cause that wrecked the two previously made, namely, insufficient force. The endeavour to storm by a frontal attack the Boer position at Colenso on December 15 was little better than a forlorn hope, doomed to failure, in all probability, even had the destruction of the two field batteries never occurred to mar the operations. At that date Sir Redvers Buller had but 20,000 British troops in his command, and the number actually in the fighting line was considerably less. Since then the British force in Natal, outside Ladysmith, has gradually swelled to some 35,000, but in neither of the attacks on the Boer right were there probably more than 20,000 engaged. Only with troops possessed of the rarest courage and the finest discipline could such advances into and withdrawals from a series of entrenched and mutually supporting positions have been undertaken with so small a force without serious risk of disaster. To storm such a defensive line with a well-founded hope of success would be legitimate work for 60,000 combatants attacking simultaneously at two or three points, and with the resolve to push through in spite of heavy losses. By that means alone could the power, which the Boers by their mobility possess, of reinforcing the assailed point with superior numbers be neutralised.

It should not be forgotten that the duty of Sir Redvers Buller has been not only to compass the relief of Ladysmith if possible, but also to safeguard Natal south of the Tugela, facing, holding in check, and harassing the main Boer army, while the general plan of operations of the Commander-in-Chief developed elsewhere. Looked at from this standpoint, these failures to pierce the enemy's lines after partial success assume a different aspect. They may be credited with other objects besides the immediate relief of Ladysmith, and with results that derive their importance from their bearing on the military movements in the central and western areas. To keep, if possible, the bulk of the Boer army between the Tugela and the beleaguered town, unable to detach reinforcements either to Magersfontein or to the Orange River districts, has been for some weeks, and is still, a matter of the highest importance.

Thus all minor operations must be held subordinate to the chief plan designed to achieve the decisive result. The flank movement of General MacDonald with the Highland Brigade to seize the Koodoosberg Drift on the west of Modder River Camp is a case in point, because its primary object may have been to deceive Cronje as to the direction from which Lord Roberts intended to advance against him. The immediate results of the operation were moreover highly beneficial. On the 7th inst. the enemy in force attacked the position he had taken up north of Koodoosberg Drift, and were repulsed with loss. Being then reinforced with cavalry MacDonald assumed the offensive, and would doubtless have gained a more decided victory had not the Boers beaten a hasty retreat. By this success he frustrated the apparent intention of the enemy to pass to the south of the Riet for the purpose of menacing the British line of communications. The operation had also the effect of raising the spirits of the Highland Brigade, restoring their confidence in themselves, and causing them and their new general to know and understand each other. In Zululand, following close on the capture of the police station at Nqutu, the Boers have taken possession of the Inkandhla magistracy, and a hostile move was expected on Eshowe, but thirty miles distant. It is very satisfactory, however, to learn that the flying column of colonial scouts has forestalled the enemy, and now guards that important point, having reached it by a forced march from north Zululand. This column has had already some stirring experiences, having been surrounded by the Boers more than once, and having been extricated from their difficulties by the skill of a commander in whom they have implicit confidence. On the whole, the general situation must be pronounced to have materially improved, and before many days are over we may look for fresh evidence that at last the tide has steadily turned in favour of the British arms in the war being waged against the two South African Republics.

Army Notes.

As we go to press we learn that Her Majesty will be advised to at once take steps to recognise the brilliant services rendered during the present campaign in South Africa by Lieut.-General French, more especially in connection with the relief of Kimberley, and that an early gazette will probably contain an announcement of his promotion to the rank of Major-General for distinguished services in the field. It may be pointed out that General French, although a Lieutenant-General locally in South Africa, is but a Colonel on the active list of the Army. It will be admitted that an officer who has rendered the signal service that he has done merits immediate recognition, for it has to be remembered that to him was due the credit of defeating the Boers at Elandslaagte. He has shown himself to be a commander of the first rank, and it is fitting and right that his reward should not longer be delayed. It is not unlikely, we understand, that the name of Lieut.-Colonel Keke-wich will also be submitted for some mark of Royal favour in consideration of the very heroic manner in which he has conducted the defence of the town for a period of 122 days, during which period his garrison has displayed the best qualities of soldierly devotion.

Mr. Frank Harris has a theory, which he has expounded in a brilliant little pamphlet called "A Conversation in Hades." He thinks that quality, not numbers, should be our ideal in South Africa, and argues his case from parallels furnished by history. The great point in war is to have a good weapon and to use it well. When we have obeyed this cardinal principle we have been successful, when we have neglected it we have been defeated. So says Mr. Harris; but, unfortunately, he is so possessed by his theory that he loses sight of other considerations. Because our bowmen drove the finest chivalry in Europe in utter rout before them, and the pikemen of the Rebellion proved more than a match for the Royalist cavalry, it does not follow that our many defeats in America and South Africa were due to defective weapons. Mr. Harris maintains the contrary, and proves it by leaving out any parts which do not support his theory. The defeat of Braddock at Fort Duquesne, of Abercromby by Montcalm at Carillon, of Murray by De Lévis at Ste. Foy, were certainly not due to an inferior British weapon. Bad generalship and lack of cavalry are generally held to be the cause of our disasters in the American Revolution, but Mr. Harris says it was the superiority of the colonial arms. In the war of 1812 he maintains that our naval defeats on the lakes were due to the modern cannon of the Americans, and triumphantly asks if this is not "a new fact." It certainly is. Most people believe that the supineness of Sir George Prevost in allowing the enemy unhindered to build a fleet at Presqu' Isle was the cause of our misfortunes, but it is just possible Mr. Harris may be right. As much cannot be said for his account of the British defeat at New Orleans. If the raw American Militia were able to rout twice their number of Wellington's veterans, how is it that English Regulars and Canadian Militia, with the same weapons, were able to defeat seasoned American soldiers two and three times more numerous? When Mr. Harris answers that question satisfactorily he will see that something more than a good weapon is required in war, or we should not have been defeated at Isandhlwana, Laing's Nek, and Majuba Hill. He does, indeed, point out that our school of military training should have been based on methods learned in our colonial wars, but he appears to think that our disasters in America and South Africa were caused more by bad weapons than by bad tactics and strategy, whereas the reverse was the case. We should have learned our science in the British Empire and the United States, not in Germany or the Crimea. The main cause of our reverses in the colonies was our European-made knowledge, which despised experience on the spot. Up to the arrival of Lord Roberts in South Africa the old story was repeated over again.

Mr. Julian Ralph's fine pen-picture of the war in South Africa as it really is should be a revelation to the arm-chair critic at home. In picturesque phrase he says that the inactivity at the Modder River has been caused, not by the enemy or our own necessities, but by modern weapons, which have reduced the military science of Wellington, Napoleon, and Moltke to absolute ineffectiveness. Had Lord Methuen been able to follow up the battle of Belmont he could have prevented the Boers entrenching themselves at Magersfontein; but as they would at once have fallen back on Spytfontein their end would have been served equally well. Pluck and dash in face of magazine rifles and artillery are wasted, for one man behind breastworks is a match for at least ten of the enemy. Hence frontal attacks in these days spell nothing but disaster. Magersfontein is simply a system of trenches raised on a wide plain; nevertheless, it is impregnable to European science. It can only be taken by starving its defenders out or attacking them in the rear. That the foe is seldom or never visible is another trying condition to an Army trained as ours has been. Mr. Ralph says that a few score Boers were seen after Belmont and a smaller number after Graspan, but while an engagement is going on they are absolutely invisible, and there is now no black veil of smoke to reveal their whereabouts. At Modder River our men did not know whether the enemy was on the north or south side of the river, and many of them have never yet seen a Boer. Such facts as these are illuminating. For the first time two forces equally well armed by modern science have come into collision, only to prove that what the world believed to be impossible is a fact. The armies of Europe, which looked so formidable on paper and on the parade ground, will have to unlearn as much as they will have to learn. When peace is declared in South Africa the finest fighting machine in the world will not be the German Army, but the British Army. Intelligence, transport, money, and staying power are likely to be the great factors in the wars of the future, brute courage and dash sinking further into the background. An army will not only have to "move on its belly," but it will have to fight on its belly.

There has been a scarcity of saddles and rifles for the Imperial Yeomanry, and the department that should have provided them is taken severely to task. To those who have come reluctantly to understand our military policy of late years the depletion of our storehouses causes no surprise. In view of the vastness of European armies it has come to be accepted as an article of political faith that the active participation of Great Britain in military operations on the continent of Europe has become a thing of the past. Our true and only rational policy, we have been taught, must be to strengthen and rely upon our fleet to assure for us an undisputed command of the seas, while maintaining for military purposes only a sufficient army to meet exchanges in our Indian and colonial garrisons. That policy has been dinned into our ears again and again by governments pledged to economy. It is not a matter for wonder, therefore, that the calls for further equipments of all kinds pour in upon the Ordnance Department in such volume and with such frequency that supply by manufacture fails to meet them. But we fail to see how the War Office can properly be held responsible; the responsibility rests with those governments which have been unmindful of our possible requirements.

The present cavalry saddle was adopted in 1891 after years of experimental trials, during which the stores of former patterns were allowed to run down. At the date named the saddle in use had been condemned, being weak in material, having flat iron arches, and being of faulty construction. The entire cavalry and other mounted services requiring riding saddles had to be re-equipped before any reserve stores could be laid in. Then the storehouses for the war proportions of three army corps had to be filled in accordance with the last general military scheme, which had reference chiefly to home defence. Hardly had these requirements been met when the Transvaal War came upon us. If not an European war it is a big war, and it has found us unprepared. We are now about to mobilise an eighth division which represents the second division of a third army corps. Every effort is, of course, being made to procure from the trade and the ordnance factories fresh supplies of saddles. Some delay may be inevitable, and in the existing emergent circumstances delay is prima facie censurable. The taxpayers should, however, be careful that the policy that has rendered such a state of things possible shall not escape its full share of the blame. Failure in the reserve of rifles, as alleged, would proceed from similar causes.

The first pattern of the magazine rifle was introduced also in 1891, superseding the Martini-Henry single-shooter. As in the case of the saddle, long and exhaustive experiments with various designs of breech action and calibre preceded the adoption of the powerful weapon the Army at present possesses. During the experimental period the accumulation of a reserve naturally fell into abeyance, to be taken up after the completion of the rearmament of the forces. These included both military and naval forces, active and in reserve, Regular and Auxiliary, at home, in India, and in the colonies. The total number required for this rearmament runs into a large figure, considerably exceeding half a million. The manufacture of the required arms proceeded year by year with a respectable show of expedition, consistently with our accepted policy of self-exclusion from the European theatre of war. The absence of a sufficient reserve of rifles at the present moment, if the allegation be correct, and there is every likelihood that it is so, must in this case also be laid at the doors of the baneful policy already referred to, which, refusing to provide adequately for the world-wide obligations and responsibilities of empire in the matter of military requirements, has rendered it necessary for the nation and its colonies to rise and show to the world the latent power that is in them, and this in no spirit of bravado, but with the grim determination to overcome all obstacles that oppose them, and to succeed, notwithstanding the proved shortcomings of the regularly-constituted guardians of the nation's interests.

The mistake made by the War Office a few months ago in upsetting the organisation of the Royal Artillery is now making itself felt. The general officer who was formerly Deputy Adjutant-General of the Artillery at the War Office having been removed, there is no longer any authoritative head to whom the Commander-in-Chief can turn for advice in regard to matters of technical concern. The duties of the former Deputy Adjutant-General have been divided in rather arbitrary fashion between two staff officers, one of whom has been placed in the Adjutant-General's department and the other in the Military Secretary's branch; but both these staff officers are too junior in rank to be able to speak and act with the necessary authority at the present time. Moreover, the division of responsibility is inconvenient, cumbrous, and slow of action. The former system under which artillery administration was consolidated in one office was excellent, and had never been called in question until Sir Redvers Buller, when Adjutant-General, took a dislike to an organisation which seemed to him to make the artillery department less dependent on the Adjutant-General's office than he considered desirable. The present scheme was worked out by General Buller before he left the War Office, and was subsequently adopted by the Commander-in-Chief and Sir Evelyn Wood, but it is working so badly under war pressure that when time permits there ought to be a return to the previous system.

As was always anticipated by those who had studied the question, the attempt to separate the artillery into two branches (field and garrison) has failed directly it was tested by war service. The new and rather pompous title of "Royal Garrison Artillery" given to the garrison batteries to distinguish them from the "Royal Field Artillery" has become a misnomer, seeing that a number of these so-called "garrison" batteries are being sent into the field with position guns, and will be brought into line side by side with the lighter batteries. The experience of the war in South Africa is showing what we have repeatedly urged in these columns, that it is impracticable to draw a hard-and-fast distinction between field and garrison guns, and between field and garrison artillerymen. Officers and men should be trained for all-round work as artillerymen regardless of these conventional branch distinctions, so that they may be available for all kinds of artillery duties wherever required. Our Boer opponents, who have given us a lead in the matter of artillery, certainly recognise no such artificial differences, and it was a grievous error to encourage our artillery officers in so false a belief and reorganise our small force of artillery on such an unsound basis.

There is a general consensus of opinion that the admirable work performed by the few Colt guns at the front has been made too little of by the chroniclers of the war. The telegram from Chieveley should make the authorities at home open their eyes, as it is certain that in the reconnaissance of the 13th and the subsequent retreat the Welsh Fusiliers would have suffered terribly had it not been for the covering fire of the Colt section, which, to quote the Manchester Guardian correspondent, "swamped the Boer fire." It was most unfortunate that the two Maxims had become jammed, an accident almost impossible with the Colt, which besides requires no water belt. Perhaps after this experience the wonderful statements of this deadly weapon's doings in the Spanish-American War will command more attention from our War Office than they seem to have done.

On the House going into committee of supply on the Supplementary Army Estimates on Tuesday, on the vote for 120,000 men of all ranks for service at home and abroad, Mr. Wyndham was afforded an opportunity of removing some false impressions which his statement on the previous night had created. He said that thirty-five guns and 1,100 men had been borrowed from the Navy during the war in South Africa, but as to officers he thought some effort should be made not to close the door of the Army, and certainly not of the cavalry, on every man who did not enjoy a private income. It was nothing less than a scandal and a danger to the country that young men could not be got for the cavalry unless their friends were able to give them a large allowance. The Government had been working at that problem, and an important committee, presided over by General French, had sat last summer on the question. As to the proposed Volunteer encampments, he stated that the Government merely offered facilities and did not exact service, and that the conditions of the several corps would be considered. A meeting of Yeomanry and Volunteer commanding officers had been convened by the Government, and they would be invited to give the fullest expression of opinion with regard to the Government proposals. He gave figures to show how much of the scheme was permanent and how the 120,000 men were made up. As to the former, he said that the fifteen battalions and the depôts involved a permanent increase of £785,000; the capital charge for barracks would be £1,500,000; the seven battalions of horse artillery and the thirty-six battalions of field artillery would form an annual charge of £535,000. Speaking of compulsion, he repeated that the scheme was one of invitation and encouragement. The Government did invite, and they hoped the invitation would be cordially responded to.

The Government's military plans have not been very favourably received by Service members in the House of Commons. At a meeting of the Service Members' Committee, which was held on Tuesday, a resolution was unanimously carried declaring that "this meeting of the Service Members' Committee in accepting the Government proposals for the present emergency doubt their adequacy, and wish to put on record that they regard their support as not in any way pledging any member of the committee with regard to the future reorganisation of the Army system." This certainly does not indicate any excessive enthusiasm for the Government's proposals on the part of the military experts in the House. As may have been gathered from the debates that have taken place, they regard the scheme as much too conjectural. But a rather erroneous impression has nevertheless got abroad as to the actual attitude of the Service members towards the scheme propounded by Lord Lansdowne and Mr. Wyndham in their respective Houses on Monday. They are not so entirely dissatisfied with the Government's programme as has been assumed in some quarters. On the contrary, they regard many of the proposals as a step in the right direction. Indeed, several of the proposed changes have actually been suggested by Service members themselves and have been received with corresponding satisfaction. But they do not in any sense regard the proposals as anything more than temporary measures. The war, it is urged, has shown the urgent need that exists for a thorough overhauling of the War Office system and fears are entertained lest the public, which is the only body which can insist on such an overhauling, should be lulled into a feeling of false security by the showy programme that has been put forward. There is a strong feeling in the country in favour of a thorough reorganisation of the Army system, and the military experts at the House are anxious to take full advantage of it. For the rest, not a few Service members make no secret of it that they hoped to see some system of compulsory service proposed. Those who express this wish are naturally looking with rather kindly feeling on the motion which Lord Wemyss will move in the House of Lords on Tuesday. His lordship will ask the House to declare that "inasmuch as our military system rests on the Militia ballot, it is essential, looking to military efficiency and the permanent safety of our country, that the ancient constitutional law of compulsory military service for home defence, and for home defence only, be at once put in force in such modified form as will effect its purpose without weighing unduly upon the people."

It is just possible that the question of compulsory service may come up in the House of Commons in the course of the present session. Major Rasch, the honorary secretary of the Service Members' Committee, proposes, we understand, to introduce a bill dealing with the subject. The measure is described as one to make better provision for the raising of the Militia, and to remove doubts which have arisen as to the powers of lieutenants of counties to raise militiamen by ballot. Major Rasch has framed his bill on the lines of that introduced by Major Grice-Hutchinson in 1896. It provides that where the necessary quota of militiamen is not made up in a particular district by voluntary enlistment recourse shall be had to the ballot. Any one not coming under the exemptions mentioned in the existing Militia Acts would be liable to service under the bill, except he be a Peer of the Realm, a member of Parliament, a resident member of a University, a clergyman, or person "engaged in any fixed or regular trade, calling, profession, or employment for gain or otherwise." The privilege conceded in some countries to persons chosen by the ballot of providing a substitute does not find favour in the eyes of Major Rasch, Sir James Fergusson, and other Service members associated in introducing the bill, and is not provided for in the measure. It is only proposed, however, to make compulsory service applicable to home defence.

We hear so much of the hatred with which this nation is regarded from one end of the Continent to the other that it is particularly agreeable to come across something in the nature of an antidote. The Vienna correspondent of the Times supplies it. Telegraphing on Monday evening he said: "Not only is the prospect of a continental coalition for the purpose of coercing Great Britain into concluding peace with the Boers more remote than ever, but the confusion among the great Powers themselves resulting from the British reverses in South Africa is undeniable. Few sensible Englishmen attach undue importance to what continues to be written about foreign alliances and ententes. It serves its purpose in the exchange of international amenities, which, of course, is something. At no period within my recollection has the necessity of England occupying a prominent position in Europe been so generally felt as it is at present. All eyes are turned her way. In fact, there is good reason to believe that at least one powerful continental State has been endeavouring within the last couple of weeks to effect a closer rapprochement with England than existed before, and I may add that I do not refer to Austria-Hungary. Hitherto the course of events has been turned to account by one Power only, namely, Russia. The rest have come to regard England's present embarrassment as likely to be detrimental to their own interests. This is a fact beyond dispute." One only has to read the move influential of continental papers to recognise the absolute truth of what the Times correspondent says. It is fast becoming recognised on all sides, even in France among the better classes, that the success of the Boers would be a dire calamity not only to Europe, but to civilisation.

The comments of our military contemporaries upon the Continent concerning the war in South Africa are not particularly fresh or instructive. They seem, indeed, to be reflective of the criticisms offered in this country, sharpened sometimes by a little sarcasm, and by some hard sayings at our expense. In many cases they appear to be based upon imperfect knowledge, and they touch very largely upon defective intelligence, the frontal attack, and strategic error. The Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung gives General Buller credit for sound strategic insight in his flank march, but is convinced that he had insufficient force for what it describes as a great strategic operation. The Militär-Wochenblatt devotes its articles largely to description, with the general view that we made a great initial error, which is working out its consequences in our various theatres of operation.

We have always regarded M. Alfred Duquet, the historian of the Franco-German War, as a sound critic, but he has given himself up to the campaign against us conducted by the Echo de l'Armée. We hope he does injustice to Captain d'Amade, the French military attaché with our forces, for otherwise that officer appears to have committed an indiscretion. It is not justifiable for an accredited attaché to make public the opinion he may form of the forces to which he is attached, but to do the officer justice, M. Duquet confesses that he learned the opinion by chance. It chiefly concerns the discipline of the troops, which is declared to be very bad, the soldiers only doing what they please. Moreover, when Captain d'Amade left Natal, they were, he asserts, "completely demoralised," and, according to the captain's interpreter, he is now questioning in what state they must be at the present time. Again, it appears that our troops present a pitiable aspect from a military point of view, being entirely ignorant of their duties. So bad is the condition, we read, that if the Boers had been properly organised they would have annihilated our Army in Natal some time ago. These supposed opinions are so utterly at variance with known facts that we would fain believe that they have been attributed to Captain d'Amade and not really expressed by him.

General Tricoche, in the France Militaire, professes to have something like exclusive intelligence that when President Kruger filled his arsenals with excellent French guns, he was careful to gather to his standard many Dutch gunners. These gunners are not numerous, and are probably too old, so that they are ignorant of the handling of modern guns, while the officers who direct them are not au courant with the new methods of fire. Therefore, says General Tricoche, it is not surprising to find that, in the matter of artillery, complete incompetence paralyses the effects of "the good intentions of President Kruger." It is rather surprising to find a French gunner condemning the very men who have won credit amongst those disposed at home to criticise the War Office, for, though the argument has chiefly been in regard to artillery material, the effect of guns can never be disassociated from the men who handle them.

In an editorial article the France Militaire likens Spion Kop to Majuba, and makes the curious remark that between the two events the value of our soldiers has very greatly declined, while there is only one constant factor, "the incurable presumption of Sir Redvers Buller." Our readers will discern that many of these criticisms are, as we have said, the outcome of imperfect knowledge tinged with a considerable spice of Anglophobia.

It is a remarkable coincidence that in the two last wars in which the regiment has been engaged, and both in South Africa, the commanding officer of the 17th Lancers has been unable to accompany it. Shortly before the date appointed for leaving England for Zululand, the late Colonel Gonne was accidentally shot at Hounslow at revolver practice. Colonel Drury-Lowe, who had but a short time previously relinquished the command, was then restored to the active list, and commanded the regiment during the campaign. The present commanding officer, Lieut.-Colonel Fortescue, is unable from serious illness to take the regiment to South Africa. The appointment of Lieut.-Colonel Gordon is a somewhat unusual step. He commands the 15th Hussars stationed in India. The second in command of the 17th Lancers has two years more service than Lieut.-Colonel Gordon, and in the rank of Major was senior to him. All his service has been in the 17th Lancers, and he was present at the battle of Ulundi.

The Commissioners of the Royal Patriotic Fund are being criticised severely in view of a recent incident. A lady, whose husband fought as a volunteer in the Imperial Light Horse and was killed at Ladysmith, applied for assistance, explaining that she was not in need of immediate help, but wished to know if she and her son of four years old might hope to benefit by the fund, and was sent one of the usual forms, showing her pecuniary circumstances, together with a postal order for £6 for immediate needs. The feelings of the lady should, no doubt, have been considered by the acting secretary, and it can hardly be asserted that the form set apart for officers' widows ought to have been sent, nor should she have been asked to send the details of her poverty to the commissioners in an open envelope, "not to be sealed or stamped," through the post office of the village where she lived. The lady, whose immediate needs have been provided for privately, returned the money and has published the case in the Morning Post.

The editor of the Daily Telegraph makes an earnest appeal for additional funds to enable him to continue his charitable work for the relief of the widows and orphans of non-commissioned officers and men who have been killed or died of their wounds in South Africa. The demands on the Daily Telegraph fund have been greater than was expected, and it is to be feared that many who would have supported the appeal for the sufferers from the war have been influenced prejudicially by articles in the press which, however well-intentioned, have undoubtedly resulted in mischief rather than good. It would be an immense pity if the public were dissuaded from giving by reason of doubts which unfortunately exist as to the disbursement of the money already forthcoming. Of two of the war funds we can speak with confidence—the Daily Telegraph and the Imperial. Their books are open to the inspection of all who are interested in the matter, while their system of administration is so simple that overlapping is impossible. Lists are published from time to time of the cases relieved, and no grant is made which has not been fully approved by commanding officers of regimental districts or others in authority. Expenses are kept down to the very utmost limit and everything that it is possible to do is done to guard against fraud or deception. This being the fact it would be an immense pity if ill-considered criticism were to influence the charitable against lending their support to a most praiseworthy effort to render assistance to the victims of the war. The management of these two funds is so excellent that we have no hesitation in commending them to favourable notice.

We welcome the announcement of Mr. Wyndham in the House of Commons that the Government have desired Lord Roberts to submit the names of deserving and qualified non-commissioned officers for promotion to the commissioned ranks.

This step on the part of the authorities we recently advocated. We are confident that the War Office will by judicious selection assist the commanding officers at the front materially, there being many smart young non-commissioned officers of good education who would be invaluable as officers just now, when the want of experience of those sent from home is so much complained of.

The counties of Aberdeen, Banff and Kincardine, i.e., the territorial district of the Gordon Highlanders, have formed from amongst their deputy lieutenants a recruiting committee for the Gordon Highlanders. The veteran Colonel Innes of Learney, "The Grand Old Man of the North," is convener of the committee, and has with him several ex-officers of the three battalions.

Her Majesty has approved of the Queen's (Royal West Surrey), Devonshire, Yorkshire, Royal Scots Fusiliers, King's Own Scottish Borderers, Dorsetshire, Derbyshire, Northamptonshire, and Gordon Highlanders bearing the word "Tirah" on their colours and appointments.

The Secretary for War has approved of extra duty pay at 1s. 8d. per day being issued to adjutants of embodied Militia battalions, having regard to the fact that paragraph 481 (v.) Militia Regulations does not apply to embodied Militia. The officer selected must be in possession of a Hythe certificate.

A number of officers now serving with infantry depôts at home have been placed under orders for service in South Africa, their places being filled by Reserve officers.

It has been decided under certain conditions to offer direct commissions in the Royal Artillery to one officer from each artillery Militia regiment. Candidates are to be under twenty-five years of age, must have served one training or its equivalent, and be in possession of a School of Instruction certificate. They must also be unmarried and will be required to pass a medical examination as to fitness for service. Commissions will be offered in both the field and garrison artillery.

The 16th Madras Infantry left India on the 30th ult. for Singapore, where it has relieved the 1st Batn. Royal Lancaster Regiment, ordered home. The 9th Madras Infantry left for Ceylon on the 7th inst. to relieve the 2nd Batn. Highland Light Infantry, also ordered home.

Brevet-Major Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, King's Royal Rifles, had a narrow escape during the late movement for the relief of Ladysmith. He was acting as A.D.C. to Major-General Hildyard, and was knocked down by the concussion of a 100lb. shell bursting on a rock near which he was sitting, but he behaved with the utmost composure and refused to relinquish his duties.

THE ARTILLERY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The following extract from a report on the wounded at the Wynberg Hospital, taken from the British Medical Journal for Feb. 10, page 343, still further confirms the view taken of the limited effect of the Boer artillery, notwithstanding its so frequently urged superiority: "A few of the patients have injuries from shell splinters, one or two injuries from the Nordenfolt projectile, and, once in a way, wounds inflicted by shrapnel are met with."

The coastguard ships Colossus, Collingwood, Benbow, and McLampus are to go at the end of the month to Portland to carry out annual prize firing. They will arrive at Devonport about April 1 for their annual refit and docking.

The Cheerful, torpedo-boat destroyer, built by Messrs. Hawthorn, Leslie and Co., of Newcastle-on-Tyne, was inspected by Admiral-Superintendent S. C. Holland on Saturday last, and passed into the Medway Fleet Reserve.

TO MILITARY MEN AND OTHERS.—PIPECLAY SUPERSEDED BY PICKERING'S "BLANCO" for Whitening Belts, Helmets, Gloves, &c. "Blanco" removes stains and discolorations, and ensures evenness of colour, and a soft silky surface. Does not dust or soil. Much better, more convenient, and cheaper than pipeclay. No trouble of preparation. "Blanco" is sold everywhere in cup-shaped blocks, in six non-corrosive boxes. Manufacturers: JOSEPH PICKERING and SONS, Sheffield.

Army Foreign.

The United States have their artillery difficulty as well as ourselves. The Commander-in-Chief, General Miles, has made a report to the War Department insisting that urgent necessity exists for the increase of the artillery branch of the Army. He states that over one-third of the artillery force is now on duty in the Philippines, that part is serving in Cuba and Porto Rico, that the costly guns at the sea-coast defences are rapidly deteriorating through neglect, and that along the whole coast-line of America, from Maine to California, there are only 8,000 men to look after the defences, with bad guns and ineffective fort works. General Miles calls for an addition of 10,000 men to the artillery force, with a large increase in coast-defence guns. War Secretary Root will place the report before the Congress, which will not, it is said, grudge the appropriations necessary to carry out General Miles's plans. On all sides it is recognised that the possible Anglo-European complications arising from events in South Africa make it advisable for the United States to be well equipped in her defences.

The United States War Department has begun work on the somewhat extensive fortifications which it proposes to put at various points at the entrance of Chesapeake Bay. The first batteries installed will be at Cape Henry. After a careful consideration of the conditions existing between the capes, it has been definitely decided that for the present it will be impracticable to lay mines in the channel at that point. Hence the main defences will continue to be at Fort Monroe, where a formidable array of batteries have been installed. The surveys now being made at Cape Henry are only preliminary to those to be made at Cape Charles. The actual work of construction has not as yet begun. It is the intention of the chief of engineers to have this entrance one of the strongest fortified points on the Atlantic coast.

The German military budget for 1900 amounts to 630,946,998 marks, being an increase upon the ordinary estimates of 21,496,449 marks. It is intended to continue the expansion of the forces provided for by the quinquennial law. The new units will be three squadrons of mounted orderlies, nineteen horse batteries, a third Abteilung or group for instruction in the School of Field Artillery, and an addition of thirty-three men to the 14th battalion of train. Certain administrative changes are also provided for, but are not of great importance. The extraordinary budget amounts to 124,484,807 marks, and includes charges for constructive work at the military centre, such as barracks, magazines, and clothing stores. A sum of 1,900,000 marks is set aside for the purchase of land for a training camp for the 15th Army Corps in Alsace-Lorraine.

It is stated that the new artillery material intended to replace the Italian 7cm. field and mountain guns will certainly be adopted in the course of the present month. The last series of trials took place at Nettuno with different guns presented by Krupp, and by the factories at Naples, Turin, and elsewhere. It is stated that all gave excellent results, and General Afan Di Rivera, Inspector-General of Artillery, has presented a report upon the subject to the Minister of War.

The Matin states that the Belgian Special Military Commissioners have decided that the Belgian-Krupp field artillery being no longer up to the level of the latest improvements should at once be replaced. The Commissioners are in favour of the adoption of the Belgian Nordenfolt-Cockerell gun.

Lieut.-Colonel Rivera y López Don Jose, of the General Staff of the Spanish Army and Military Attaché to the Spanish Embassy, died in St. George's-road, S.W., on the 5th inst., greatly regretted.

Army Personal.

The Queen paid a second visit on Wednesday to Colonel R. S. R. Fetherstonhaugh, late King's Royal Rifles, who was severely wounded in action on the Modder River. The Queen, who was accompanied by Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein and Princess Ena of Battenberg, remained in conversation with Colonel Fetherstonhaugh for about half-an-hour.

The Queen's sympathy with those who have suffered by the war was shown at Maidstone on Tuesday when she stood as godmother to a child of Mrs. Denne-Denne, which was born within a few days of the death of her husband, Major Henry William Denne-Denne, Gordon Highlanders, at the battle of Elandslaagte. Her Majesty was represented by Mrs. Metcalf, of the Priory, Winchester, and she forwarded as a gift to the child a bronze bust of herself, bearing the inscription, "Presented to Victor Alexander by his godmother, Victoria, R.I., 1900."

A worthy correspondent writes to us from Dublin:—

"The departure from Ireland of Lady Roberts is something more than the withdrawal of a lady of prominent position, of whom the man in the street knows little. It is of her public work, as the wife of the distinguished Field-Marshal Commanding in South Africa, that I wish to treat. As vice-president of the Irish branch of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Families Association, Lady Roberts has performed her duty in an estimable and businesslike manner. During the four years of her residence in Ireland she has presided over the various committees, inquired into innumerable cases, passing doubtful ones rather than do the injustice of refusing one genuine case. Every winter she inaugurated concerts, and by other means raised annually substantial sums for the association. When I mention that yearly no less than 6,000 garments were collected and distributed your readers will in some measure be able to appreciate the extent of the work. The correspondence which was conducted by the Hon. Aileen Roberts would surprise many an adjutant-general. When the present war in South Africa began Lady Roberts addressed a touching appeal to the Irish public. Up to the beginning of this month she received a response of £15,825. Since the beginning of the campaign, 1,542 women and 2,077 children have been relieved monthly. In addition 1,067 persons, parents chiefly, who were dependent upon their sons, have received assistance. The numbers have been largely increased by the embodiment for active service of the Militia. The amount required to meet these monthly disbursements is £3,077. To her successor Lady Roberts has handed over a balance of £10,865. Such is a noble work. It necessitated great labour and unremitting attention. Lady Roberts personally visited a large number of widows and orphans in the hour of their distress, and, as the mourning mother of a gallant soldier, she to-day has the sincere sympathies of many an honest heart in the humble homes of our soldiers, whether it be in barracks, camp, or cottage. They have reason to regret the withdrawal of her directing hand and they fully recognise all that they owe her."

General Sir George Willis, G.C.B., the veteran Colonel of the Middlesex Regiment, has been confined to his bed at Bournemouth suffering from a sharp attack of malarial fever, but is now on a fair way to recovery.

The condition of General Sir William Lockhart, a Calcutta telegram states, continues to improve, and all the alarming symptoms have disappeared.

A telegram from the Times correspondent at Chieveley Camp states that Lieut.-General Sir Cornelius Clery is suffering from blood poisoning and has been obliged to vacate his command and proceed to Maritzburg, and that Major-General the Hon. N. G. Lyttelton has taken his place in command of the 2nd Division. Lieut.-Colonel C. H. B. Norcott, Rifle Brigade, has assumed command of Major-General Lyttelton's brigade. Telegraphing to his brother, Mr. John W. Clery, of Westborough, Cork, on Monday, in reply to an inquiry, General Clery said: "Mooi River, 9.55 a.m.—Received 12.32 p.m.—Slight injury leg, possibly tedious, but nothing."

Lieut.-General A. Nugent, who has been Colonel of the 7th Dragoon Guards since April, 1892, will, we understand, be offered transfer to the Colonelcy of the Scots Greys, vacant by the death of General G. C. Clarke. General Nugent wore the uniform of the Greys from 1852 to 1880.

He succeeded to the command of the regiment February 3, 1867, and remained at its head until June 21, 1880. In the event of General Nugent's transfer, General A. G. Montgomery-Moore, Colonel of the 18th Hussars, would, there is reason to believe, be afforded an opportunity of associating himself once again with the Black Horse, in which he received his first commission in 1850 and served with until November 10, 1856.

Major-General Wauchope's charger, "Lady Mayoress," from which he was shot at the battle of Magersfontein, has been brought back to this country. The deceased general expressed a wish that this should be done, and his faithful man, Jobson, carried out the instructions most satisfactorily, the beautiful mare having arrived in perfect condition.

Major-General E. T. H. Hutton, C.B., A.D.C., commanding the Canadian Militia, has been selected to proceed at once to South Africa on special service, and has left for England. The Canadian press, in referring to his departure, pays a high tribute to his abilities as a military reformer, and considers his withdrawal "a distinct loss to the force over which he has presided with such admirable tact and wonderful ability."

Major-General Sir Frederick Carrington, K.C.B., proceeds to South Africa at once to take up an appointment. The command of the Belfast District thus falls vacant. In the district itself there is a feeling in favour of Colonel F. J. Graves being appointed to act temporarily, more than one correspondent writing to say that no better or more popular appointment could be made; Colonel Graves having done wonders in popularising soldiering in Belfast, and bringing a good class of recruits to the colours of both line and Militia battalions.

New appointments were announced in orders at the Modder River on Monday: Major-General Sir H. E. Colville has been appointed commander of the 9th Division. Major-General Pole-Carew leaves the 9th Brigade in order to command the Guards' Brigade, and is succeeded in the command of the 9th Brigade by Colonel Douglas.

Surgeon-General W. Taylor, C.B., A.M.S., P.M.O. in India, has been granted a Distinguished Service Reward. He has upwards of thirty-five years' service, during which period he has been as many as seven times on active service, viz., the Jowaki expedition of 1877; the Burmese expedition, 1885-86; the Hazara expedition, 1888; the Burmese expedition, 1888-89; the Ashanti expedition, 1895-96; the Nile expedition, 1898; and he was attached to the headquarters of the Japanese Army during the war between Japan and China in 1894-95. He has been on three occasions mentioned in despatches, especially for his services as Principal Medical Officer of the expedition to Khartoum in 1898, for which he received the honour of a C.B. and the order of the Medjidie. Amongst his other decorations for these numerous campaigns he wears the Japanese War medal, awarded him with thanks for his valuable services to the Japanese Army in 1894-95.

Sir Reginald Wingate has clearly plenty to do do just now, and it must not be supposed that the work of administration is over. With reference to the recent insubordination of the Soudan troops at Omdurman the Times Cairo correspondent says: "The departure of Lord Kitchener and other experienced officers distressed the black troops, whose loyalty has always been personal. The recent incident, though not in itself serious, may prove useful by suggesting to the authorities to take precautionary measures. The great size of the Army and its concentration at Omdurman have hitherto been necessary; but the desirability of changes, which were always expected after the pacification of the Soudan, will, doubtless, be considered presently. General confidence is felt in the Sirdar's discretion, for Sir Reginald Wingate's knowledge of native character is unique."

The Queen has approved the appointment of Colonel H. Jekyll, C.M.G., R.E., to be an Assistant-Secretary of Embassy, Paris.

Colonel F. D. Cochrane, C.B., half pay, late of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, has taken over the duties of A.A.G. Belfast District, in the absence of Colonel G. E. Harley, C.B., on active service in South Africa.

Colonel H. H. Settle, C.B., R.E., has this week taken over command at Orange River with the local rank of Major-General.

Lieut.-Colonel J. M. Grierson, R.A., Military Attaché at Berlin, has been called from his post in order to proceed on special service to South Africa.

Lieut.-Colonel H. M. E. Brunner, retired list, late Scottish Rifles, whose "Notes on Organisation and Equipment" are a popular guide for those preparing for examination, has brought out a third edition of his excellent work, "The Boer Wars, 1889-1900" (London: Messrs. Clowes and Sons). The new edition has been brought thoroughly up to date and contains a map of the seat of the war.

Lieut.-Colonel W. Johnston has taken up duty as Assistant-Director Army Medical Service, Victoria-street.

A private letter from Cape Town published in the Daily News says that since his arrival Lord Kitchener has discovered that Mafeking largely owes to Brevet-Major Lord Edward Cecil, Grenadier Guards, the possibility of its long defence. Ascertaining on the eve of the outbreak of war that the Government contractor had orders to send to Mafeking a certain quantity of stores, the Premier's son on his own responsibility, and pledging his private credit, directed that the quantity should be increased fourfold. This was done, and gallant little Mafeking abundantly provisioned.

Mr. Frederick Treves, the eminent surgeon, who was present at the battle of Colenso in his capacity as Consulting Surgeon to the Forces, has sent an interesting letter from Frere, written a few days after the battle, to the British Medical Journal. Mr. Treves, in referring to the death of Lieutenant the Hon. F. H. S. Roberts, tells of an act of the truest heroism on the part of an Army medical officer. He says:—

"After a heavy afternoon on the field I returned to Chieveley field hospital in the evening, but had hardly got in when a galloper arrived to ask me to see Lieutenant Roberts, who had just been brought back. I returned at once with a full equipment of instruments, and much regret that that valiant soldier was from the first quite beyond the reach of surgery. He was pulseless. I slept outside his tent that night, and saw him up to Chieveley on Saturday morning. He never rallied nor regained a pulse, and died on Saturday at midnight. Before he was brought in he had been lying for seven hours in the sun in a donga. Here he was attended to by Major Babbie, R.A.M.C., who rode into the donga through a hail of bullets, and whose horse was killed under him. Major Babbie kept by the many wounded men in the donga until the battle was over, and as he alone had water in his water-bottle he doled out water to each man in a minim measure, one drachm to each. The courage and daring of Major Babbie on this occasion calls for some recognition from the medical profession if not from the military authorities."

THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

Saturday, Feb. 10.

On the rising of the House after midnight, Mr. Balfour—it had previously been stated that the War Office had no advice—said: "Our information points to the fact that Buller is not pressing his advance from the position he occupied on Wednesday. We have not thought it right to press him for details of operations in progress, nor if he gave us such information do we deem it right to make it public till the operations are completed."

It appears that in the course of Wednesday afternoon, the 7th inst., the balloonist reported that the enemy had developed extraordinary artillery strength on Doorn Kloof, having got in position at least a dozen heavy guns, some fitted with disappearing mountings and all masked. The guns completely commanded the road which Gen. Buller proposed to take to Ladysmith, and rendered advance impossible except at terrible sacrifice and the possibility of defeat. At the same time it was out of the question to mount guns on the captured kopjes, the men being exposed to a galling shell fire without any chance of making an effective reply. In the circumstances Sir Redvers Buller determined to retire, the movement being carried out in perfect order.

Lord Roberts and staff arrived at Modder River yesterday and received a most enthusiastic reception.

It was explained during the evening that Major-Gen. MacDonald's retirement from the Koodoosberg Drift—news of which reached London yesterday afternoon—was due to the fact that position was found to be too difficult to hold. The withdrawal was ordered from headquarters. All accounts are agreed as to admirable manner in which both the advance and retirement were carried out, the whole affair reflecting, it is said, "The greatest credit on Gen. MacDonald's tactics, and showing beyond doubt the implicit confidence which all ranks of the Highland Brigade have in the soldierly qualities of their popular commander." Lord Roberts visited the camp of the Highland Brigade this morning and addressed a brief speech to each battalion. He referred to his past associations with their regiments in India, where, he said, they helped to make him. He had never campaigned without Highlanders, and he would not like to be without them now. He was glad Gen. MacDonald had reported well of them. He recalled how the Seaforth's once made a long and arduous march with him. They would have a shorter one now, he said, but it would not be a "walk-over." Nevertheless, he did not doubt that it would be a successful one. The brigade gave three cheers for the Commander-in-Chief, and another for Lady Roberts. Lord Roberts, acknowledging the compliment, said that Lady Roberts was doing for them at home what was, perhaps, better work than his for she was helping the welfare of their wives and families.

The Boer losses at Koodoosberg are said to have been considerable. Twelve dead were found which the enemy had left in the hurry of their retreat, and it is known that others were buried and carried off.

Sunday, Feb. 11.

The War Office issued despatches during the evening, conveying the intelligence that the Boers had increased their forces round Kimberley, where the construction of trenches has begun.

Major-Gen. Clements reported to-day, from Rensburg that on Friday the Boers tried to turn his right flank, but they were beaten off and the position was retained. Casualties were small.

Eight transports left England yesterday and to-day, seven conveying troops and one horses.

Monday, Feb. 12.

According to a telegram from Lord Roberts, which was issued from the War Office late on Wednesday night, an important movement for the invasion of the Orange River Free State began to-day, when the cavalry division under Lieut.-Gen. French seized the crossing of the Riet River at De Kail's Drift, Col. Hamay with a brigade of mounted infantry having marched the previous day from Orange River to Randam, which lies to the south of Jacobsdal. Gen. French, it appears, left De Kail's Drift in the morning with three brigades of cavalry, several batteries of Royal Field Artillery, and numerous colonial contingents. In the evening he reported that he had forced a passage, and had occupied the hills on the north of the river, capturing three Boer laagers with their supplies. Meanwhile Lieut.-Col. Gordon, 15th Hussars, leading a cavalry brigade, made a feint on Rondevaal Drift four miles to the west, and seized that and a second drift towards Klip, besides capturing two more laagers. The losses in these brilliant operations were small. The 6th Division was last night on the north bank of the Riet at Waterval Drift, and was moving up in support of the cavalry, while the 7th Division was at De Kail's Drift with Lord Roberts. The heat was intense and several officers and men had to be sent back suffering from prostration. Lord Roberts describes Gen. French's operations as brilliant "considering the excessive heat and blinding dust storm which raged during the latter part of the day," and necessitated four officers and 53 men being sent during the evening back to the line of railway prostrate with heat exhaustion.

Two small cavalry actions took place to-day in Natal. In one of them, near Springfield, Capt. the Hon. A. Hamilton-Russell and five men, Royal Dragoons, were wounded, and 2nd Lieut. Pilkington and six men taken prisoners. Lord Dundonald made a reconnaissance from Chieveley Camp, forcing the Boers to retire from some high ground.

The Hamilton Board of Trade to-day held a meeting to consider the Vancouver proposal to offer 10,000 troops for service in South Africa. A resolution was adopted to the effect that Canada should offer to increase the Canadian contingent to whatever extent may be found necessary by the Imperial authorities.

At a meeting of the Royal Commission of the Patriotic Fund, held to-day, it was reported that the Lord Mayor had transferred £250,000 of the Transvaal War Fund to the commissioners of the fund; that 287 widows and 290 children had been granted immediate relief in anticipation of permanent allowances; that 139 widows were already receiving permanent allowances; and that 31 dependent relatives had been granted donations.

Tuesday, Feb. 13.

Telegrams published to-day from the front from Lord Roberts, Modder River, Feb. 11, 12.55 p.m.:—

"I have received the following telegram from Buller, dated Feb. 9: 'It was necessary, after seizing Vaal Krantz, to entrench it as the pivot of further operations, but I found, after trying for two days, that owing to the nature of the ground this was not practicable. It was also exposed to fire from heavy guns which fired from positions by which our artillery was dominated. It is essential to troops advancing on Ladysmith by Harding or Monger's Drift to hold Vaal Krantz securely, and accordingly we are not pressing an advance by those roads as I find we cannot make it secure.'"

From Modder River by Renter's agency, Feb. 11:—

"Lord Methuen ordered the withdrawal of Gen. MacDonald's force from Koodoosberg under instructions from headquarters. In the view of military men Gen. MacDonald's move, which was only a reconnaissance, had a most excellent effect."

A Reuter's despatch from Rensburg stated that the Boers yesterday showed in great force westward of that place, drove in our pickets, and ultimately compelled a retirement of our troops from Coles Kop and all the posts around it. The enemy mounted a 40pr. gun on Bastard's Nek, and this commanded the whole of the surrounding country. Gen. French now holds no position west of Rensburg. "The men," the despatch says, "are chafing at the necessity for the retreat, but there are not troops enough to hold the position."

Our troops at Rensburg were to-day attacked by the Boers in force, and Lieut.-Col. Coningham, 2nd Batn. Worcestershire Regiment, was severely wounded and has since died. Other casualties are given elsewhere.

Wednesday, Feb. 14.

Col. Plumer, from news which came to hand during the day, does not appear to be able to make much headway towards Mafeking from the north. The Crocodile River is again in flood and delaying his progress, and the Boer forts at Gaberones have not been captured.

The Daily Telegraph correspondent in Ladysmith sent a message dated Feb. 9, in which he said that the town is practically impregnable, and that the garrison regrets that no second assault has been delivered upon it. President Steyn, during his recent visit to the Boer lines, is reported to have been threatened by many of the older burghers for dragging their country into war, of which they are getting quite tired.

Thursday, Feb. 15.

No further news of any importance came to hand from Lord Roberts up to midnight.

Col. Plumer and Col. Nicholson had forwarded to the Cape copies of telegrams received from Col. Baden-Powell at Mafeking up to the 3rd inst. In these it is stated that the garrison is healthy and cheerful. There are stores enough to last until June.

Friday, Feb. 16.

News reached London in the early hours of the morning from Lord Roberts that Lieut.-Gen. French had relieved Kimberley. The information was contained in a telegram to the War Office from Lord

Roberts, dated Jacobsdal, Feb. 16, two a.m., which ran as follows: "French with horse artillery, cavalry, and mounted infantry, reached Kimberley this evening (Thursday)."

The siege of Kimberley has lasted exactly 122 days. It was on Oct. 15 that it was completely isolated, and on the evening of Feb. 15 Gen. French, with his cavalry and horse artillery, entered the town. The defence of the town has been successfully carried out by Lieut.-Col. Kekewich, 1st Batn. Loyal North Lancashire Regiment. The garrison consisted of a wing of that battalion, aided by the Kimberley Rifles and Diamond Fields Horse, the Diamond Fields Artillery, and a strong local corps, specially raised and officered by special service officers. There have been severe engagements outside the town, the principal having taken place on Oct. 24, Nov. 23, and Nov. 28. The Boers have succeeded in bringing up several heavy guns, and have continuously bombarded the town, but with little result. Four engagements for the relief of the town were fought by Lord Methuen's force at Belmont (Nov. 23), Enslin (Nov. 25), Modder River (Nov. 28), and at Magersfontein (Dec. 11). Early in January the garrison and townsfolk were reduced to rations of horseflesh, and the pressure was evidently so strong that Lord Roberts was induced to hasten preparations for an advance to its relief. This movement has been partially carried out by General French, but it cannot be said to be complete till the Boers, who occupy the strong position between Kimberley and the Modder River, have either retired or been displaced.

Reuter's correspondent furnishes some particulars of French's march, which shows it to have been a feat of a brilliant character. The rapidity of his movements, in spite of all difficulties, thoroughly outwitted and surprised the enemy, who were forced to retire precipitately.

From Cape Town it was reported that the Boers are leaving Magersfontein to reinforce other positions, but 7,000 to 10,000 of the enemy were said to remain in their old quarters.

A Reuter's telegram from Arundel, dated Wednesday, stated that the British force under Gen. Clements fell back from Rensburg upon that place during the night. The enemy promptly followed, and reoccupied their old positions in the Taai Bosch Hills. Some artillery fire followed, our guns making fairly accurate shooting.

A Central News telegram from Cape Town described the evacuation from Rensburg as a purely military proceeding. During the retirement the enemy were charged by the Inniskilling Dragoons with great dash, the Boers suffering severe loss.

An additional detachment of New South Wales Lancers left Sydney for South Africa. The force consists of picked men and horses.

AMERICAN CRITICISM.

The Army and Navy Journal of New York, writing of the war in South Africa, says:—

"'Fighting, and as much of it as possible,' was the recipe given by an English officer of the Peninsula for learning the art of war. English officers are now getting their training in this hard school, and no doubt they will profit by it. That they badly need war training is shown by the statements of their own officers, and among them General Gatacre, who, in a lecture delivered last May before the Royal United Service Institution, expressed his disbelief in scouts, holding that each regiment should be required to look after itself. In commenting on this lecture, Major-General Gosset, C.B., said: 'Anyone who follows the action of Crauford's Light Division in the Peninsular War realises that the secret of its success lay in the fact that every man was a trained skirmisher. We are apt in peace-time to gradually forget the lessons learnt in war, and this, I take it, is the reason that skirmishing has gradually been eliminated from our drill book and become a lost art.' General Gosset further stated that the principles laid down in the English drill book, while theoretically perfect, have failed practically; and individuality, which is the keynote of the firing line, is non-existent in many battalions of the English Army."

There is much outspoken criticism in England of the management of military affairs in South Africa, and much more that is not spoken except in whispers. On the Continent the criticism of English methods is very general. . . . The military officers have been, no doubt, hampered, as are our officers in this country, by the domination of political and civilian control over matters which should be left to the exclusive management of the military authorities to secure military success. Still, this is one of the conditions controlling military men in a free country, and they must accommodate themselves to it and resign their offices if they do not see their way to do so. The strong and capable man will always get his way. The policy of 'it is not me, it's the other boy,' may, answer in the nursery, but will carry little weight with practical men in these days."

Lieut.-Col. C. Coningham.—Lieut.-Col. Charles Coningham, 2nd Batn. Worcestershire Regiment, has died of wounds received in action at Riet River on the 12th inst. Born Aug. 14, 1851, he joined the Royal Dublin Fusiliers as Sub-Lieutenant March 23, 1872; became Captain Feb. 1, 1882; was promoted into the Worcestershire Regiment as Major Dec. 9, 1891; and succeeded to the command of the 2nd Batn. Worcestershire Regiment as recently as Dec. 11 last. He served in the Soudan, 1885-86, with the Frontier Field Force (medal and bronze star).

Lieut.-Col. A. H. Bircham.—Lieut.-Col. Ambrose Humphreys Bircham, Major, retired list, late King's Royal Rifles, died at the Pines, Fleet, Hants, on the 12th inst., aged 55. He was third son of Francis T. Bircham, of Burhill, Surrey. He joined the Army June 28, 1864; became Lieutenant March 8, 1867; Captain May 13, 1875; Major July 1, 1881; and retired on retired pay with the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel Dec. 31, 1884. He served with the 3rd Batn. King's Royal Rifles in the Zulu War, 1879, and was present at the action of Ginginhlovo, relief of Ekowe (medal with clasp).

Lieut.-Col. H. A. Egar.—Lieut.-Col. Henry Averell Egar, 2nd Batn. Royal Irish Rifles, is officially reported to have died on the 13th inst. at Burghersdorp from wounds received in action. He was born April 17, 1853, and received his commission in the Royal Irish Rifles through the Militia Dec. 2, 1874; becoming Captain Jan. 18, 1882; Major Dec. 28, 1889; and Lieutenant-Colonel Nov. 25, 1896. He was wounded and taken prisoner on Dec. 10, since which time he has been lying seriously ill, having had to submit to amputation of his leg and several fingers.

Capt. H. J. Wallack.—Capt. Henry J. Wallack, late of the 9th and 77th Regiments and Gentlemen-at-Arms, died at 46, South Lambeth-road on the 12th inst., aged 75. He served with the 9th Regiment throughout the Sutlej campaign of 1845-46 and was present at the battles of Moodkee, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon.

Capt. C. Eykyn.—Capt. Cecil Eykyn, 2nd Batn. Black Watch, died of wounds received in action at Koodoosberg on the 8th inst. He was the fourth son of the late Mr. T. Eykyn, of 47, Hyde-park-gate. Born June 6, 1867, he joined the Black Watch from the Militia July 6, 1889; became Lieutenant Jan. 29, 1891; and Captain Nov. 30, 1898.

Capt. M. W. Dickson.—Capt. Matthew Williams Dickson, late 77th Regiment, died at Buckhurst Hill, Essex, on the 9th inst., aged 68.

The Army.

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue).—A story of the gallantry of Lieut. the Duke of Roxburghe in an engagement at Rensburg is told in a letter from a trooper to his sister at Farnham. He says:—

"Gen. French ordered one squadron of the Blues to go out on reconnaissance to find the enemy. Well, after some time we did find them, but they were in too strong a position, and we only numbered 80. The bullets began to whistle round and the shells to drop, and our position becoming dangerous we had the order to retire, which took a little time as we were all dismounted on top of a big hill, and the horses were a little way off. By the time we had reached the bottom of the hill someone had galloped off with my horse, so I was left without a mount. The firing was getting rather thick, and I thought my last day had come, for I had no chance of getting away alone. But the Duke of Roxburghe came back for me and I got up on his horse behind him, and he carried me in safety away from fire. So I owe my life to him."

1st (Royal) Dragoons.—Capt. the Hon. A. Hamilton-Russell has been wounded and 2nd Lieut. Pilkington taken prisoner this week in a reconnaissance on the Tugela.

8th Hussars.—Headquarters and two squadrons left Queenstown on Tuesday in the Norseman for South Africa. The remaining squadron left the Royal Albert Docks in the Sicilian on Wednesday.

17th Lancers left the Tilbury Docks on Wednesday last in the Victorian for South Africa. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cambridge sent farewell messages wishing the regiment all success and a safe return.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

M Battery R.H.A. was to have left Queenstown on Wednesday in the Pinemore for South Africa, but had to be put back in consequence of "pink eye" among the horses.

The new V, W, and X Batteries R.H.A. are in course of formation at Woolwich, Y Battery at Aldershot, and Z and AA Batteries at the Curragh with effect for the 13th inst.

No. 3 Depot Battery R.F.A. has moved from Woolwich to Weedon.

The new batteries of R.F.A. which come into existence from the 13th inst. are the 107th, 108th, and 109th at Woolwich, 110th, 111th, and 112th at Newcastle-on-Tyne, 113th and 114th at Colchester, 115th at Weedon, 116th and 117th at Woolwich (temporarily), 118th at Coventry, 120th at Exeter, and 121st at Dorchester.

The Clare Militia assembled at Ennis on Monday and left the same day for Devonport, where it arrived on Tuesday and took over quarters.

Lieut.-Col. A. H. C. Phillpotts has been appointed to the command of the 12th Brigade Division which is being formed at Shorncliffe, consisting of the 104th, 105th, and 106th Batteries R.F.A. Among his officers are: Capt. Nixon-Eckersall, W. J. K. Rettie, Lieuts. A. M. Perreau and E. J. Dixon.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major A. C. MacDonnell will lecture at the Royal Engineering Institute on Thursday next at 5.30 on "Progress in the Art of Surveying." Major E. H. Hemming read a paper on Thursday on the "Latest Ideas on Barrack Design."

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards.—Lieut. Swaine, 2nd Batn., has been selected for special service in Natal.

Royal Scots (1st).—Lieut. Stuart, 2nd Batn., has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Protheroe, C.B., commanding the Burma District.

Queen's (2nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. at Portsmouth has been placed under orders of readiness to embark for South Africa.

Bufs (3rd).—Capt. McDouall has joined the 2nd Batn. in South Africa on promotion from the 1st Batn. in India.

King's Own Regiment (4th).—The 1st Batn. will leave Singapore on Monday next in the Delaware for England, where it is due on March 25. The 3rd (Militia) Batn., under command of Lieut.-Col. North, left home on Monday last in the Majestic for South Africa. Major Carleton, 2nd Batn., who was reported missing after the action at Spion Kop, is, it turns out, a prisoner of war unwounded at Pretoria.

Northumberland Fusiliers (5th).—Two new line battalions are about to be added to the regiment, to be known as the 3rd and 4th, the present 3rd (Militia) Batn. becoming the 5th Batn. The augmentation is to take effect from the 12th inst. The nucleus of the new units will be raised at Portsmouth. The 5th (Militia) Batn. left Southampton on Saturday last in the Pavonia for Malta, there to be stationed.

Royal Fusiliers (7th).—The new 4th Batn. is being formed at Dover and comes on to the establishment of the Army from the 8th inst. Capt. England, 1st Batn., has been appointed A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Boyce Combe, C.B., commanding the Rawul Pindi District.

Somersetshire Light Infantry (13th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. at Portland has been placed under orders of readiness to embark for South Africa.

Royal Irish Regiment (18th).—Capt. Fosbery, Milner, and Daniell have joined the 1st Batn. on active service in South Africa on promotion from the 2nd Batn. in India.

Lancashire Fusiliers (20th).—The 5th (Militia) Batn. will assemble at Bury on Monday next on embodiment and proceed to Chatham to be stationed. The 6th (Militia) Batn., 24 officers and 628 men, under command of Lieut.-Col. Romer, sailed from Southampton on Saturday last in the Malta for South Africa.

South Wales Borderers (24th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Queenstown on Wednesday in the Cheshire for South Africa. So much has been written lately regarding the absolute necessity for good field glasses as part of the kit in the present warfare, that it is with pleasure we record that this regiment has been presented with a dozen Zeiss magnifiers for the use of the officers and non-commissioned officers by Lieut.-Gen. Ross, who commanded the 2nd Batn. for upwards of 10 years.

Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers (27th).—Capt. Thompson, Reserve of Officers, has been selected for duty at the depot.

Worcestershire Regiment (29th).—Details moved on Monday from Devonport to Aldershot.

East Lancashire Regiment (30th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left Queenstown yesterday in the Servia for South Africa.

Royal Sussex Regiment (35th) will leave Malta to-morrow in the Pavonia for South Africa.

South Staffordshire Regiment (38th).—The 4th (Militia) Batn. left Queenstown on Monday in the Arundel Castle for South Africa.

Welsh Regiment (41st).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left home on Monday last in the Majestic for South Africa.

Black Watch (42nd).—In place of the relief movement originally decided on, an exchange is being effected between the right and left wings stationed at Seetapore and Benares respectively. Headquarters remain at Seetapore.

Royal Berkshire Regiment (49th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. will assemble on Monday next for embodiment, and will be stationed at Kilkenny. Col. Bowles, commanding the battalion, has issued this appeal throughout the county for recruits:—

"I invite all old Militiamen who have passed through the ranks to rejoin their old regiments and do their duty to their country, also all old soldiers of the Royal Berks Regiment. I further hope that all eligible young men in the county will avail themselves of this opportunity of serving their country. The Royal Berks Militia have always done their duty nobly in the past, notably during the Crimean War, and have always been well reported on. For Queen, country, and the Royal county."

Border Regiment (55th).—Lieut. Brooke has been selected for employment with the Chinese Regiment at Wei-Hai-Wei.

Wiltshire Regiment (62nd).—Capt. Forbes will take up the duties of Adjutant of the 3rd V.B. Somersetshire Light Infantry on the 4th prox. for five years.

North Staffordshire Regiment (64th).—Capt. Holland, late of the regiment, has been selected for duty at the depot, Lichfield.

Welsh Regiment (69th).—Lieut. Channer has been appointed to the British South African Police.

Seaforth Highlanders (72nd).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. left home on Sunday last in the Simla for South Africa.

Highland Light Infantry (74th).—Headquarters and the service companies will leave Ceylon to-day in the Jelunga for England.

Gordon Highlanders (75th).—Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Burney, Professor at the Royal Military College of Canada, has been ordered to proceed forthwith to South Africa, having been selected for the appointment of second in command, vice Brevet-Lieut.-Col. Macbean promoted to the command.

Seaforth Highlanders (78th).—The wife of Major Mackenzie, who has been missing since Dec. 21, has received a letter from Sir Arthur Bigge, stating that the Queen has sent instructions that nothing is to be left undone to clear up the mystery surrounding her husband's fate, and that a telegram has been sent to the Cape by the Under-Secretary of State to have every possible inquiry made. Replying to a question of Mr. Weir in the House of Commons on Tuesday, Mr. Wyndham said:—

"Endeavours have been made to obtain information in regard to Major Mackenzie, and information has at length been received from Pretoria that he is not a prisoner there, and that the Transvaal Government is trying to find out whether he was killed and buried on the field of battle. It would further appear that the enemy secured the identity tickets only of their prisoners, and not of the dead Highlanders, who were buried on the spot, and I am afraid that it must be assumed that those of the men reported missing who have not since been accounted for were killed and buried there."

Capt. Bradford has vacated his appointment as A.D.C. to Gen. Sir F. Grenfell at Malta in order to join the battalion on active service.

South Staffordshire Regiment (80th).—Capt. Chads has been selected for the Adjutancy of the 1st V.B. Gloucestershire Regiment at Bristol.

Royal Irish Rifles (83rd).—Lieut. Brennan has been selected for the Adjutancy of the 2nd V.B. Bedfordshire Regiment at Great Berkhamstead.

Royal Irish Rifles (86th).—Majors Seton and Welman are reported from Pretoria to be doing well. The former, in fact, is stated to be convalescent.

Scottish Rifles (90th).—Capt. Northey has joined in South Africa, from India, on promotion from the 1st Batn. (26th).

Leinster Regiment (100th).—The 3rd (Militia) Batn. at Woolwich has been placed under orders of readiness to embark for South Africa.

Royal Dublin Fusiliers (102nd).—The 5th (Militia) Battalion left Southampton on Wednesday last in the Servia for South Africa.

Rifle Brigade.—Capt. Dawson, 4th Batn., has been selected for employment with the mounted infantry in South Africa.

West India Regiment.—Lieut. Russell, D.S.O., has left England to take up his appointment in the Egyptian Army.

Army Service Corps.—No. 3 Company left Aldershot on the 8th inst. for Southampton and embarked in the Armenian for South Africa.

Army Pay Department.—Promotions, changes, &c.: Col. Senior, C.B., Chief Paymaster, to retired pay; Lieut.-Col. Kitson to be Chief Paymaster, vice Senior, and Major Lowry, Staff Paymaster, vice Kitson. Col. Johnston, Chief Paymaster, to Devonport; Major Sheehan, Woolwich, to Clonmel; Capt. Constable, Portsmouth, to Rifle Depot. On probation: Capt. Field, Natal; Lieut. Thompson, Norfolk Regiment (Dec. 29). From retired pay: Major Utermarck, at Home District, temporarily employed; Major Chisholm-Batten, promoted Lieutenant-Colonel (Jan. 8). Lieut. Morland, Suffolk Regiment, appointed to the depot from Jan. 28, 1899.

PROMOTION EXTRAORDINARY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I noticed in a recent gazette the following announcement which was so peculiar that I have taken note of subsequent gazettes to watch the development of the promotion made in the announcement referred to, which runs as follows:—"Regt. The undermentioned Lieuts. to be Capt. to complete establishment: (italics are mine) "— and — (since killed in action)." The "since killed," &c., refers to the last-named. The officer described as "since killed" was killed in action 10 days before his promotion is gazetted. I therefore fail to see where the "since" comes in. To a layman it seems natural to suppose that as these two gentlemen were promoted "to complete establishment," and that as one of them has now been dead for some weeks, the man next for the step would have got it, but as several gazettes have subsequently appeared with no intimation of such promotion, I ask myself what it can all mean. It is another instance of "how not to do it," for which I understand our military authorities are somewhat famous. If you can help me to a solution of this mysterious and extraordinary promotion of a man long dead at date of his promotion you would greatly oblige one who is sorely

PERPLEXED.

OUTLINES OF MODERN TACTICS.

Col. E. Gunter's Outlines of Modern Tactics (Clowes and Sons) is a volume that immediately commended itself as of great utility to officers of all arms. The third edition is practically a new book, and is not less than admirable in its appreciation of the conditions set up by the introduction of modern arms, and in the excellent way in which the subjects are treated. It covers the whole ground of tactics, dealing with outposts, patrols, the attack in its many forms, defensive operations, scouting, the combination of the three arms, and much else. Practically it embraces the fruit of experience gained up to November last in South Africa, and it speaks much for the discernment of the author that a great deal of what he says seems specially applicable to events that have since occurred. He lays particular stress upon the importance of scouting and of escorts for artillery, and discusses the question of frontal attacks, the importance and character of entrenchments, and the advantage conferred chiefly upon the defence by the introduction of the magazine rifle and smokeless powder. Among other points, Col. Gunter dwells upon the importance of the open-order formation as indispensable in modern war. He points out the conditions in which night attacks are practicable, and his remarks upon skirmishing are particularly good. Altogether the book is very suggestive and full of practical value. We have great pleasure in recommending it most heartily.

THE 2ND WEST INDIA REGIMENT.

The history of the West India Regiment is exceedingly interesting, for the black troops have done much gallant service for the Empire in earlier times and in quite recent days. The history of the 1st Bn. was written by the late Col. Ellis, and if he had lived he would probably have told the story of the 2nd West India Regiment. Col. Caulfield has taken up the work, and his volume, entitled One Hundred Years' History of the 2nd Bn. West India Regiment (Forster, Groom and Co.), has lately been published, and many who are interested in the corps will be very glad to possess it. It is more in the nature of a chronology than a history, but there is a great deal of interesting matter in it, though it might well have been fuller. A black corps formed from free blacks and slaves purchased from the planters was enrolled in 1795 by Col. Seaton, and was placed upon the establishment of the British Army, forming the 2nd West India Regiment. The early service of the corps was against the Caribs in St. Vincent, and the black troops did excellent work with varied fortune at that time, and gained great credit from Gen. Hunter for their zeal and activity. The regiment was moved about in the islands and in 1801 arrived at Jamaica, arousing a storm of indignation. The project of raising black troops had been received in some quarters with great disfavour, and the Jamaican House of Assembly prayed the home authorities to remove the newcomers, whom they regarded as enemies in disguise. This policy was not palatable to the Government at home, but a proposal was made that if the colony would support the entire force stationed in the island, the black troops would be withdrawn. The prejudice rapidly disappeared, for the valuable qualities of the soldiers came to be recognised. A striking incident was noted in September, 1809, when the regiment, having been driven by the weather into Jacmel, the light company volunteered to march more than 300 miles over the mountains to join the British forces then before the enemy, and when this was found impracticable they wished to subscribe 400s. each out of their pay to hire a vessel to carry them round. The headquarters went to West Africa in 1819, and from that time forward the West India regiments have been closely associated with the maintenance of our position on that coast. The black troops are hardy, frugal, and brave, and they are the very men for campaigning in that malarious country. Their excellent qualities have greatly commended them to the military authorities, and the establishment has been increased. The West India Regiment has been often engaged against the Ashantis and in all disturbances among the native tribes on the Gold Coast. An instance of particular gallantry was the storming of Sabaggee in 1856, when they rushed up to the enemy's stockade, and opened a heavy fire through its loopholes. Col. Caulfield records many other gallant episodes in the history of the West India Regiment.

SHORT NOTICES.

Whitaker's Naval and Military Directory and Indian Army List (J. Whitaker and Sons) is now well known, and the new issue is a distinct improvement upon its predecessor. Space has been found for seniority lists of naval and military officers, and an excellent feature is a colonial army list appended to the volume, useful when so many colonial contingents are now in South Africa. We notice some other improvements which add to the value of the volume. How to Get a First Class in Seamanship.—Lieut. Frederic C. Dreyer, R.N., has written an excellent book under this title which should be in the hands of every midshipman (Griffin, Portsmouth). It is full of the author's experience derived from his own service, though he modestly says that that experience is limited. In any case he has condensed into a small volume just the information that is required to gain a first-class certificate, and those who study his book will avoid many pitfalls and learn how to make the best use of their time afloat. The diagrams illustrating construction could not be better, and the book seems complete in every respect.

We have also received the following: The Naval Word Book, by N. W. Thomas, M.A. (Lipsius and Tischer, Kiel), an excellent English and German vocabulary of naval subjects, practically upon the lines of Mr. Delbos' "Nautical Terms" in English and French, and Mr. Thomas, who dates his book from Kiel, has done good service, and his book is very welcome. We can only find space to mention Britain and the Boers (Simpkin), by Lewis Appleton, an exposition of the Government policy; The Transvaal War Album (Newnes), a series of very fine plates illustrating the forces in South Africa, published in sixpenny parts; The Transvaal in War and Peace (Virtue), a well-illustrated record of facts and experiences, now being issued serially; The War and its Lessons (African Review Office), an illustrated issue which is kind enough to quote from our columns, but nevertheless contains some fallacious views, particularly in relation to the invasion of this country; the first part of Britain's Sea Kings and Sea Fights, a new popular work being issued by Messrs. Cassell, and containing a brightly-written story of naval achievement from the days of Drake to the present time by some well-known writers; Feilden's Magazine, which has for its motto "Militantly British," and promises extremely well, being a technical issue largely resembling the American Cassier's Magazine, and being full of instructive matter, extremely well illustrated; The Secret History of the Oxford Movement, by Walter Walsh (Sonnenschein), a new edition; and the first part of Der Krieg in Süd-Afrika, by Lieut.-Col. von Müller (Liebel, Berlin), second edition, containing the early history of the Boer States, and an account of the opening of the present operations.

A VETERAN ON A CERTAIN HYPOCRISY.

FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

"If you wish," said Major von Blutwitz, "to understand how and by what methods and arguments continental opinion on the South African question is against you into fury fanned, read carefully the fifty-one pages wherein the case, in the Revue des deux Mondes for February 15, most fully is discussed.

"Here shall you find the British Empire and its leaders in all this matter tried, found guilty, and without mercy condemned. Read it, my friend. The arrows which the author, Dr. Kuyper, shoots at you are very sharp, they are steeped in venom. Some of them the mark do fairly hit. For instance, touching on the fact that the Boers do not altogether relish the idea of the blessings which British civilisation to their corner of South Africa might probably import, you will at page 520 of the Revue find a passage which your good religious folk in England may most profitably study. "More than the bubonic plague at Delagoa Bay," says the writer, 'do the Boer medical men dread the importation of a certain preventable malady whose ravages so largely your Indian Army do afflict.'

"He quotes the admissions of Lord George Hamilton in the House of Commons on January 25, 1897, that in 1895 the number of your troops in India so affected rose to 522 per 1,000, and that the number rendered for duty ineffective did daily to 46 per 1,000 actually amount.

"Here, my good friends, we have a reminder of the effects of your besetting national sin—a sort of despicable hypocrisy—a refusal to look patent facts in the face—which in this sad matter, so effectively invoked by your enemies, enables them in the eyes of Europe your efforts to discredit and your name to blacken.

"Some remedy has, you say, since the date named been applied to this scandal. So be it. I rejoice to hear you. None the less does the object lesson furnished by your former shameful neglect to protect your troops from such a calamity reveal how fatally considerations, false, unpractical, and unmilitary, in all sorts of ways the efficiency of your armies may affect."

THE COLONIAL FORCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Being on a visit from New Zealand, I think the present juncture, when every thought of the Empire is centred on the doings and wellbeing of our Army, a fitting time to make a few suggestions, which I sincerely hope will meet with the consideration of the authorities, for I am convinced these suggestions, if carried out, would tend to cement with indissoluble bonds the strong affection felt by all the colonies for our beloved Queen and our mother country, and of which the colonies have, we are rejoiced to know, given no small proof by sending their sons to fight for the Empire. This has been done with no grudging measure, and as long as they find their men are of use and that there is work for them they will continue sending them to battle for Britain's rights. What I wish to say is that no doubt when this war is over it will be necessary, for some years at least, to keep a strong military force in South Africa. Our standing Army will have to be increased, and as in all recent wars mounted infantry have become a necessity, why not maintain them as a permanent and separate arm of our service? This being so, would not the present time be a splendid opportunity for raising a permanent mounted infantry regiment from each of the colonies as an integral part of our Regular Army? In times of peace it might not be possible to recruit from the different colonies, but at any rate arrangements could be made for remounts from them and in time of war. I venture to say suitable recruits would come in from colonial Militia and Volunteers. I will not enter into details as your space is valuable, but will proceed to my second proposition, which is that arrangements might be made so that the colonies, especially New Zealand with its splendid climate, might be used as a kind of half-way house where regiments returning from India and other tropical climates could be sent for a couple of years before returning to the severer climate of England. I believe there is no doubt that this could be most desirable from a medical point of view, and to my personal knowledge it would have a most beneficial effect on the efficiency and discipline of the colonial forces to be brought in contact with well-drilled and thoroughly-disciplined regiments of the line; it would also stimulate the martial ardour of young colonial boys. I have written more than I intended, as my object was merely to start the ball rolling, and I hope that others more powerful than myself will take the matter up, for there is more in it than might appear at the first glance.

J. V. SHEPHERD.

THE ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—May I suggest that while those in authority have serious intentions of adding to the Regular Army, the useful and efficient body of Royal Irish Constabulary should likewise receive their attention, and be substantially increased in numbers, by which means fewer regiments of Regulars would be needed in Ireland.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1900.

THE FLEET AND HOME DEFENCE.

THE references to the Navy, and to its work, duties, and responsibilities, which are scattered through Mr. Wyndham's speeches on presenting the Supplementary Army Estimates cannot be said to be completely reassuring. Mr. Wyndham assures us that he belongs to the "blue-water school," but, regarded from a naval point of view, there are too many traces of what we are minded to call "parochial" influence or teaching to make us feel satisfied that he is thoroughly orthodox on this point. As the writer on the military scheme in the Times puts it, "When he came to speak of the conditions of national defence the Under-Secretary showed no grasp of his subject and no clear idea of the nature of our requirements. 'We must contemplate the possibility of raids' when the fleet is 'away.' This is unquestionably true; but we have not to contemplate invasion unless our naval position is such as to render invasion unnecessary. 'We should be much happier,' said Mr. Wyndham, 'if we had an additional 120,000 men or more as an additional guarantee against small raids.' But, as was pointed out, we have already no less than 400,000 men in this country in spite of the heavy drain caused by the war, and if this number is incapable of protecting us against 'small raids,' no imaginable force can do so. It is not numbers that we need, but qualities and organisation."

Mr. Wyndham began his speech with the assertion that because of the magnitude of the expedition sent to South Africa, the resources available "for home defence" had been reduced to an altogether inadequate level. And he went on to say that against the contingent risks, whatever they may be, military home defence provides one-half the insurance. Presumably, therefore, according to his view, the Navy provides the other half, an aspect of the position which is altogether novel and entirely unsatisfactory. Later on he defined the nature of the risk against which we are to be insured by stating "that in the event of apprehended invasion we should not have one Regular soldier to put into an arsenal, dockyard, or commercial port, however great the interests involved." As, however, he had previously informed the House that there are at least thirty-two companies of Militia garrison artillery and eighty-eight battalions of Militia infantry remaining in the country, not to mention the Volunteer artillery and infantry which can be spared from defending "the great ridge of hills surrounding this city, the heart of the Empire," it does not appear that we are without some force competent to perform these duties. That the task of the Under-Secretary of State for War was most difficult everyone must admit, but it would have been considerably simplified had he made an all-powerful Navy the foundation of his proposals. The introduction indeed of so much, as Sir Charles Dilke said, about "fixed defences, home army, home defences and invasion," is incompatible with Mr. Wyndham's profession of faith in what the "blue-water school" regards as the real military needs of the Empire, aptly summarised by Sir John Colomb as: First, supremacy at sea; and secondly, a mobile army to strike.

Although Mr. Wyndham did not use, so far as we have been able to discover, the actual words "coast defence" in his speeches, he tells us that it is the intention of the Government "to overhaul the armaments and ammunition of our forts in this country," and that it is proposed to lay a scheme for the purpose before Parliament later in the session. It is to be hoped that before this scheme sees the light of publicity it will be submitted to a board of naval officers. The views of the War Office authorities upon what is required in this direction are evidently of the vaguest, since, as a writer in the Times points out, the official conception of the raids to which we may be liable is so elastic that it apparently includes "such a trivial operation as the attempt to destroy a signal station and so gigantic an enterprise as the attempt to invest London." The leading article in which this passage occurs is a most able and thorough exposition of the creed of those whom Mr. Wyndham has called the "blue-water school." "In coast defence there is no protection against invasion." "The only sure defence of an island state is a naval force supreme at sea." "No enemy will ever attempt invasion until he has first challenged that supremacy and overthrown it." That our ports require a few guns and garrisons goes without saying, but the requirements in each case should be settled by naval authority and naval authority alone. To quote the Times: "The efficiency of our coast defence ought to be measured not by its magnitude nor by its lavish local distribution, but by its adaptation to certain definite and purely subsidiary purposes, and by its strict subordination to a policy of national defence which rests upon sea supremacy as its fundamental datum. If the forthcoming proposals of the Government are found to satisfy these essential conditions well and good. They will do no harm, and they may serve, as Lord St. Vincent said, 'to calm the fears of the old ladies' of both sexes. On the other hand, we trust that the House of Commons and the country will not give their consent to any proposals based on any form of the pestilent theory, which has cost us so dear in the past, that fixed, passive, and sedentary defences can at any time, or in any place, or in any circumstances, take the place or do the work of a mobile sea-going and sea-keeping force."

NAVAL TRAINING.

LORD GRAHAM, writing to the Times from Port Said, briefly considers some of the defects of the Training Squadron pointed out by various correspondents who have supported the abolition of that squadron. Lord Graham retorts ably enough upon those who differ from him, but seems to display a somewhat exaggerated belief in the value of exercises under sail to the modern bluejacket. Like all advocates for the retention of the squadron, his lordship is forced to lay undue stress upon the qualities developed by drill aloft. In effect this reasoning amounts to sentiment, for nothing is easier than to over-estimate the results of such training. Beneath all such pleas lies the suggestion that we cannot turn out men of strong nerves and active bodies except by a course of gymnastics aloft. But that this is a fallacy appears to be proved by the work done by the gallant young officers and bluejackets taking part in the present war. Lord Graham is correct in his estimate that far more than 30 per cent. of the bluejackets could be trained in a squadron composed of six ships, but he has to admit that even six ships would not suffice with our expanding personnel. This, however, is not a vital point, or it only becomes so because the Admiralty attached such slight importance to the training that they constantly neglected to enlarge the squadron. If the supporters of the old system of training have appeared from the recent correspondence to be more numerous than the opponents, this is evidently due to the fact that the younger school of naval officers and the senior officers who welcome the change feel that the supporters have been flogging a dead horse and struggling to avert the inevitable. Lord Graham's views are entitled to respect, but he adds nothing fresh to his former arguments, and shows besides that his experience of the system is by no means recent. The system might have survived a few years longer had the squadron consisted of genuine sailing ships. But the screw was ever ready for use in emergencies, and there is no doubt that it was used often enough to discount what little value the system possessed. To us it appears quite improbable that training under sail will be revived.

In connection with this subject Admiral Sir J. O. Hopkins has also replied to a letter from "Navalis," in which the latter condemned and deplored the increasing tendency to withdraw lieutenants and sub-lieutenants from sea service to undergo training in the gunnery and torpedo schools. The diminution of sea training, if it can be proved to have actually diminished, is undoubtedly a serious matter, but the figures given by "Navalis" do not settle the point conclusively. He shows that in 1880 4 per cent. of the lieutenants and 27 per cent. of the sub-lieutenants were undergoing shore training, whilst in 1900 the percentages have risen to 9 and 41. "Navalis" is undoubtedly correct in judging that the increased proportion of officers under training in the several shore establishments is drawn from the lists of those on full pay, but he makes insufficient allowance, as Sir John Hopkins points out, for the fact that the expansion of the fleet involves the special training of a higher proportion of specialist lieutenants. The Admiralty have never departed from the principle of regulating the supply of specialists in gunnery, torpedo, and navigation by the bare requirements of the squadrons in commission. The expansion of the personnel necessarily involves the withdrawal of more lieutenants from the sea-going ships, but does not affect the length of sea service if we take the lieutenants' list en bloc. On the contrary, there has never been a period of peace service in which so high a proportion of lieutenants was employed constantly on full pay and in sea-going vessels. The increase in the percentage of sub-lieutenants under training in the shore establishments must, we fancy, be obtained by some inaccuracy in the figures of "Navalis," seeing that the Greenwich course has been materially cut down since 1880, whilst the gunnery and other courses have not been lengthened. But whether or not "Navalis" is correct in his data Sir J. Hopkins supplies a pertinent and valuable commentary. Whilst fully alive to the importance of sea training, he urges that there is nothing "deplorable or alarming" in the measures taken by the Admiralty for the training of officers in such work as must be learned in the schools. If the Admiralty were training a needlessly large proportion of specialist lieutenants and withdrawing these from the fleet by so doing, the alarm of "Navalis" would be justified. It is not so long, as Sir J. Hopkins observes, since the Admiralty were blamed for failing to educate naval officers to the European level. Now that they are being more fully trained in the scientific side of their profession it is somewhat inconsistent to raise the cry of too much shore service.

Naval Notes.

It hardly needed the assurance given by Mr. Goschen to Mr. Bond last Monday to make it certain that the attention of the Admiralty has been constantly directed to reducing the danger of fire on board men-of-war in action. But while we believe that an endeavour has been made to reduce the wooden fittings in ships to the narrowest limits compatible with comfort and habitability, we are not sure that something further might not be done in this direction, particularly in the case of the older vessels. It would be altogether a mistake to judge our ships by what occurred to the Chinese at Yalu or the Spaniards at Santiago. In the first place the standard of discipline is very different, and in the second there can be no question but that we pay a great deal more attention to the efficiency of our fire service. The fire mains and connections should, indeed, in all cases be below the protected deck, and where possible they should be duplicated. But so far as the iron or steel decks are concerned, the fact that they are covered with planking should not necessarily be a source of danger, so long as the wood work of the cabins and other fittings can be easily removed and thrown overboard. At the battle of Santiago it was shown that the most frequent cause of fire was the unburnt pellets of powder which, acting like case shot or shrapnel balls, penetrated the wood work and then burst into flame. We assume that all wooden bulkheads and partitions or articles of furniture between decks would be removed before going into action, and that, therefore, we should not have to fear the occurrence of similar outbreaks.

When the patriotic impulse is so largely stirring the Empire it would indeed be surprising if we did not find some reflection of its sentiment and power in the naval section of the civil population—the section, that is, which is composed of men who have served Her Majesty afloat, but who, for various reasons, have retired from active service. It is only natural, then, to learn that a proposal has been made to form a battery of six long 12prs. for service in South Africa, these guns to be manned by qualified seamen-gunners who have served their time in the Navy, and officered in a similar manner from the same source. The officers who have proposed this scheme are Lieutenants L. E. Traherne and Lord Gillford, both of whom, although they have resigned their commissions, have the necessary knowledge and experience to carry out their plan. The former was a gunnery-lieutenant, and at one time Inspector of Warlike Stores under the Admiralty, while the latter has also seen considerable service, having been at one time Flag-Lieutenant to the late Sir George Tryon. We have no doubt that the scheme is a perfectly feasible one, and that both the funds necessary to supply the equipment and the gunners would have been forthcoming if the necessary encouragement had been given by the authorities. Naturally such a force would have to be under the control of the military commander-in-chief, and it is understood that for the present the War Office officials have refused to entertain the application for permission to raise the force on the grounds that "they have garrison artillery gunners available to the full numbers for the guns to be sent out."

The Warrant Officers' Journal states that Mr. Fred Jane was recently invited to represent the claims of that body in the House of Commons, and was approached by a deputation to that end. Mr. Jane expressed his willingness to seek election and no lack of sympathy with the ambitions of the warrant officers, but his views were not, it seems, sufficiently in accord with those of the warrant officers to render the selection desirable on either side. The warrant officers wish to run a candidate who is willing to agitate, if the word may be forgiven, precisely to order, whilst Mr. Jane has his own views on the pay and promotion of warrant officers and is not disposed to modify them. He was liberal enough to say that had it been possible to come to an agreement with his proposed patrons he would have been content with the payment of his election expenses. This was a more liberal offer than the warrant officers can expect to receive in many quarters, but they naturally desire that their representative should strictly represent their views. For our own part we very much doubt if the voting power of the warrant officers at any of the home ports is numerous enough to secure the election of a candidate committed to a particular line of agitation. The dockyard vote can always turn the scale at the home ports, as shown by the election of Messrs. Kearley, Clough, and Sir J. Baker. Mr. Jane was willing to press for the promotion of deserving warrant officers to the supplementary list of lieutenants, but the warrant officers think it preferable to ask for rank and pay equivalent to that of Army quartermasters, considering that the social difficulty can thus be avoided.

The following additional officers have been landed in Natal: Lieutenant Drummond, of the Terrible; Lieutenant Dooner, of the Monarch (temporarily); Messrs. Skinner and Kirby, midshipmen, of the Terrible; and Surgeon Jeremy, of the Terrible (temporarily).

An announcement in the Times that Lieutenant Charles Austen has, "by permission of the authorities, opened a recruiting office for the Navy at the Windsor Guildhall" may take some people by surprise, for, as a rule, we are not accustomed to associate naval lieutenants with recruiting, and in any case the Windsor Guildhall seems to be not altogether appropriate to the situation. As a matter of fact, although we can find no allusion to the matter in the official Navy List, the paragraph alluded to does not appear to presage any new departure. Most of the recruiting for the Navy is done at the recruiting stations presided over by officers of the Royal Marines, but there are in addition two, and perhaps more, honorary lieutenants employed on the same duty. Lieutenant Austen, who retired with that rank from the chief boatswains' list, has been appointed recruiting officer for Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, and Oxfordshire, and the magistrate's room at the Windsor Guildhall has been temporarily given him as an office. A blue flag with the words on it "Recruiting Office for the Royal Navy" is displayed outside the building. Presumably Lieutenant Austen, who may be remembered by his own shipmates as the boatswain of the Superb at the bombardment of Alexandria, has offices also at Oxford and Buckingham, but we should imagine that never before, or at all events not since the days of the last great naval war, has the Royal borough of Windsor seen a naval recruiting flag displayed within its walls.

It is officially announced that the Shadwell prize, which was founded in 1888 by a number of his brother officers in memory of Admiral Sir Charles F. A. Shadwell, has been awarded to Lieutenant Denis B. Crampton, of the Proserpine. This officer was promoted for taking five firsts at Greenwich, and already holds the Goodenough medal and Beaufort testimonial. As a lieutenant of the Thrush he served in the naval brigade landed for the Brass River expedition, and was also present at the bombardment of the Sultan of Zanzibar's Palace on August 27, 1896. The Shadwell testimonial is bestowed annually on the officer of a rank not higher than lieutenant and who has never been classed as an assistant-surveyor, who has sent in through his captain the most creditable plan of an anchorage or other marine survey, accompanied with sailing directions recently executed by himself.

The Pegasus appears to have been in collision with the merchant ship Trefusis off Montevideo last week. The latter vessel sustained considerable damage, but what happened to the cruiser has not been made known.

The Niji, a thirty-one-knot torpedo-boat destroyer, built for the Japanese Government by Messrs. Yarrow and Co., left the West India Docks on the 7th inst. for Greenhithe, where she remained for the adjustment of compasses until the 11th when she left for Japan. The day was specially selected by the Japanese authorities as it was the anniversary of the accession to the throne of the present Japanese Dynasty 2,560 years ago, which has thus been unbroken since B.C. 660. The present Emperor is the 121st of his race.

The paucity of senior accountant officers is indicated by the transfer of Paymaster F. C. Leonard from the Brisk in China to the Pique, commissioned on Thursday last at Devonport, on the latter reaching the Far East, as his place in the Brisk is to be taken by an assistant-paymaster, and an officer of the latter junior rank performs the accountant officer's duties while the Pique is on passage to her station. The active list of fleet and other paymasters is undoubtedly short of the requirements even when there is no unusual number of vessels in commission. In the event of war we would have to do what Admiral of the Fleet the Earl of Clanwilliam, then Rear-Admiral Lord Gillford, suggested in 1877-78 as Junior Naval Lord, when the vessels commissioned in consequence of the Russo-Turkish War absorbed every available officer and man of the accountant branch, "dispend with accounts."

How much truth there is, or whether there is any at all, in the story which comes from Cape Town about the ducking of an editor it is, of course, impossible at present to determine, but we may be sure that naval officers would not have taken such a course except under gross provocation. According to the report, certain remarks appeared in a local paper which were considered to be inimical to the interests of Her Majesty's naval service, as well as libellous of the naval commander-in-chief, whereupon Admiral Harris's flag-lieutenant and four junior officers of the Doris invited the editor to Admiralty House at Simon's Town and there demanded an apology. This was refused, upon which the editor was marched down to the jetty and there "ducked," and he is now said to be bringing an action for damages placed at £1,000. There is more than one point in the story which makes us inclined to doubt it, but it does remind us of the British bluejackets who at Auckland, New Zealand, when a local editor spoke lightly of the valour of their comrades in the Maori War, took somewhat similar measures to those here described in order to procure an apology. A rope was passed round the small detached office, which was at once the editorial sanctum and composing room, and the Jacks manned the fall. The boatswain stood ready to pipe "Haul away," but the threat was sufficient and the apology was ample. We never heard of any civil action then.

On Christmas night when a large number of liberty men were ashore at Montevideo from the British squadron, a brawl occurred between two bluejackets in a public-house where thirty or forty petty officers and men had assembled. The landlord called in the police, and the liberty men put them to flight. The British Minister was unable to make any impression upon the bluejackets, and went to fetch Captain Inglefield, of the Swallow, who succeeded in reducing the seamen and marines to submission. The rioters were locked up for the night and part of next day, and several petty officers were disrated.

Naval Personal.

Admiral of the Fleet Sir Nowell Salmon, V.C., attains the age of sixty-five on Tuesday next. He was born ten years to the day after the late Admiral of the Fleet Sir Geoffrey Phipps Hornby. Vice-Admirals H. G. Andoe and Ernest Rich reach the ages of fifty-nine and sixty on Monday and Saturday next respectively.

Admiral the Hon. F. A. C. Foley, well remembered for his long period of active service, will, we are sure, be accorded the sympathy of his numerous old naval friends at the loss of his son, Captain R. E. Foley, 45th Bengal Infantry (Rattray's Sikhs), who died last week at Mooltan (Punjab).

Admirals Sir W. M. Dowell and Sir A. H. Hoskins, as members of the Royal Commission of the Patriotic Fund, were present at a meeting of that institution on Monday last. Interest is now naturally directed to this special fund in the present necessity for distribution of charity, and with two such distinguished officers the claims of the naval service could not be in better keeping.

Admiral L. E. H. Somerset and Commander W. F. Gregory, whose obituaries we recorded last week, served together as lieutenants in the Duke of Wellington during the Baltic expedition, 1855.

Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Stephenson attended on Thursday in last week the funeral of Major the Marquis of Winchester at Amport, Hants.

Rear-Admiral A. L. Douglas, Second Naval Lord of the Admiralty, in replying to the toast of the Navy at a dinner given by the Worshipful Company of Pavors on Monday last, remarked that the Service of which he had the honour of being a member had attracted considerable attention lately on account of the excellent shooting of the naval brigades in South Africa. As the officers and men of the Navy were accustomed to fire at moving targets when at sea, it was consequently "mere child's play" to them to hit the mark when firing projectiles on shore. The gallant Naval Lord is a distinguished gunnery officer as well as an able commander-in-chief; his opinions are, therefore, valuable on such an important subject.

Captain C. S. Adair, of the Australia (appointed to the Royal Sovereign), and Commander R. Purefoy Fitzgerald, of the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, had the honour of dining with Her Majesty the Queen at Osborne on Friday in last week.

Captain R. B. Farquhar paid off the Nymph yesterday at Portsmouth.

Captain A. J. Pocklington, of the Europa, who returned to Portsmouth last week from Malta with the paid-off crew of the Ramillies, is to leave again on Tuesday next with the reliefs for the Australian Station.

Captain Percy Scott, of the Terrible, has tested another naval gun on his specially-devised carriage at Durban with most satisfactory results. It has, like the troops, gone to the front.

Captain Frank Finnis paid off the Amphion on Tuesday last and has been appointed from the following day to the Illustrious, thus giving him continuous employment. The satisfactory commission of the Amphion in the Pacific which has just terminated, together with the period he commanded the flagship Royal Arthur on the same station after the death of Captain F. P. Trench, are recognised in his new appointment, which his numerous friends will in every way appreciate.

Captain the Hon. A. G. Curzon-Howe commissions the Ocean on Tuesday next to relieve Captain A. C. Corry, of the Hood. The latter vessel left Malta, homeward bound, on the 8th inst.

Commander Reginald G. O. Tupper, of the Pylades, who has had good experience of the Australian Station, recently conveyed His Excellency Earl Beauchamp and staff to Norfolk Island, a settlement not often visited by the Governor of New South Wales, although within his jurisdiction.

Commander E. W. E. Wemyss's appointment to the Impregnable places his abilities as second in command in an important branch of the personnel of the Navy. Comparatively early promotion for service as executive officer of the Intrepid during an important period of her recent commission on the North American and West Indian Station, prior to which he served with distinction in the Cape flagship, tends largely to his advantage in carrying out the duties in the senior officer's ship of the boys' training service.

Commander F. G. Egerton, who succumbed to the wounds received in action at Ladysmith in November last, died intestate, and his estate, valued at £2,964, goes to his brother.

Lieut.-Commander Marcus Ward, of the Hussar, now homeward bound to pay off, was honoured with the presence of the King and Queen of Greece at a musical entertainment.

Lieut.-Commander C. E. Monro, recently senior Lieutenant of the Rambler, has been appointed to command the Dart in place of Commander J. F. Parry, who has served in her since November, 1895. Lieutenant Monro, like several of his brother officers, was four years a Sub-Lieutenant and has served nearly fifteen in his present rank, which is a long period of expectation for promotion when the arduous duties of the Surveying Department are considered, and to which he has been attached for the past sixteen years.

Sub-Lieutenants A. G. Craufurd and A. R. Palmer have both been promoted Lieutenant, after one year's junior commissioned service, for meritorious examination at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich.

General Sir Howard S. Jones's compulsory retirement from the Royal Marine forces on Saturday last closes the active service career of one of its most valuable and distinguished officers. An able commandant, he afterwards brought his ability to bear in the more important position of D.A.G. with a success that largely operated to the advantage of both branches of the corps. The award of K.C.B., followed by a Good Service Pension in 1897, is sufficient proof of his value as an officer and a gentleman during a career of more than forty-six years.

Colonel C. H. Scafe, Commandant, Plymouth Division R.M.L.I., received official notification of his promotion to Major-General on Saturday last, and formally took leave of the officers, warrant officers, and non-commissioned officers at their respective mess-places, thanking them for the loyal support they had invariably afforded him in carrying out the duties of his command. Colonel F. Baldwin has relieved Colonel Scafe as Divisional Commandant, but as his health is at present indifferent, he will probably proceed on leave at an early date, and during his absence Colonel R. P. Coffin, recently appointed Second Commandant, will command the division.

Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel C. G. Gordon, R.M.L.I., relieves Colonel A. D. Corbet, second in command at the dépôt, on the promotion of the latter to Second Commandant at Chatham.

Major H. G. Cotterill, R.M.L.I. (Plymouth), Instructor of Musketry at the dépôt, is advanced to the senior majors' list, and will be relieved in his staff appointment by Major A. G. B. Urnston, R.M.L.I., of the Powerful, now at the front in South Africa. Until the latter returns Major

Lieutenant A. P. Grattan, R.M.L.I. (Leander), obtains promotion to Captain by the recent alterations in the senior list at a comparatively early age—25½ years—for officers of the Light Infantry division.

Lieutenant H. J. Coles, R.M.L.I., has been detailed to relieve Captain F. E. C. B. Chichester, R.M.L.I., in the Hibernia at Malta on promotion.

NAVAL PENSIONS.

An Order in Council, made on Jan. 29, is published in the Gazette, approving of certain proposals of the Admiralty, in consequence of the changes that have taken place in the numbers of officers on the lists since the existing Naval and Greenwich Hospital pensions were established, to rearrange the number so as to equalise as far as possible the percentages of pensions allotted to the various ranks below that of flag officer. Mr. Goschen and his colleagues suggested that the rearrangement should include alterations in the number and designation of pensions now authorised for certain ranks; alterations in the arrangement of the pensions authorised for certain ranks, and the provision of one pension for warrant officers of the Royal Marines.

The following are the number of pensions established for commissioned officers of the Royal Navy in lieu of those given by Article 2126 of the Regulations for the Navy: Flag officers, 4 naval pensions of £150 each; captains, 12 naval pensions of £100 each; commanders, 25 naval pensions of £65 each; lieutenants, 32 Naval and 17 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £50 each; staff-captains, four Greenwich Hospital pensions of £80 each; staff-commanders and navigating lieutenants, 13 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £50 each; chaplains and naval instructors, 8 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £50; inspectors-general and deputy inspectors-general of hospitals and fleets, 2 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £100 each; fleet and staff-surgeons, 15 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £50 each; paymasters-in-chief, fleet, staff, and paymasters, 15 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £50 each; chief inspectors and inspectors of machinery, 2 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £100 each; fleet, staff, and chief engineers, 19 Greenwich Hospital pensions of £50 each.

On the promotion to flag rank of a captain retired from the active list of captains, he is not in future to be required to relinquish the Naval or Greenwich Hospital Pension of which he may be in receipt. The following is to be the number of Greenwich Hospital pensions for chief gunners, chief boatswains, chief carpenters, gunners, boatswains, carpenters, and chief officers of coastguard: Chief gunners, chief boatswains, and chief carpenters, 17 pensions of £35 each; gunners, boatswains, and carpenters, 41 pensions of £25 each; chief officers of coastguard cruisers, Royal Naval Reserve batteries and stations, and senior mates of cruisers, nine pensions of £25 each. The pensions for chief gunners, chief boatswains, and chief carpenters are to be grouped, and as vacancies arise they will be allotted to such individual rank within the group as may seem to the Admiralty to be desirable, having regard to the number of officers on the list at the time. The pensions for gunners, boatswains, and carpenters are to be similarly grouped and dealt with. A Greenwich Hospital pension of £25 a year will now be established for warrant officers of the Royal Marines, the qualification for such pension to be five years' service as warrant officer, subject to such modification as may seem to the Admiralty desirable. The following are the number of Greenwich Hospital pensions established for commissioned officers and warrant officers of the Royal Marines: Field officers and captains, 10 pensions of £65 each; quartermasters, two pensions of £50 each; warrant officers, one pension of £25. Officers who have received severe wounds in action, or disabling injuries on actual service, or officers retired for physical unfitness which arose in, and was directly due to, the service are to be exempted from the rules as regards time of service to render them eligible for a naval or Greenwich Hospital pension. The reappointment of the naval and Greenwich Hospital pensions is to be carried out in such a manner as may seem to the Admiralty to be suitable. It is also announced that the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have concurred in the arrangements proposed.

Navy Foreign.

The debate upon the new naval bill in the Reichstag has been extremely interesting, though not profoundly instructive. Indeed, Admiral Tirpitz, who is rather a ponderous debater, somewhat plaintively asked the members if they expected him to say anything that was new. The fact is that the magnitude of German commerce, the expansion of the colonies, and the responsibilities of empire have already been exploited most thoroughly in the conduct of the naval "scare." The most serious communication which the admiral made had reference to what has been somewhat veiled, namely, the ultimate purpose of the Government. Expressions of hostility have been carefully avoided, but many points have indicated that the German fleet in its measure is intended to rival our own—a fact which will not, of course, escape the attention of the Admiralty or the Government. The German fleet, said Admiral Tirpitz, may be weak as regards the number of ships, but it must be adequate to keep open the North Sea, and its numerical weakness is to be counterbalanced "by the inner strength which will be attained by excellent training and perfect organisation." Apparently the German Navy Department counts upon possessing a monopoly of these essentials. Herr Bebel, the Socialist leader, forced Admiral Tirpitz to make a declaration in regard to a possible conflict with England, and the admiral declared that such a conflict would be a great misfortune for Germany, but he concluded, "I cannot see what it has to do with the increase in the strength of the Navy."

A vast amount of literature is being published in Germany in relation to the subject of naval expansion. The Navy Department is circulating a statement of comparative strength and expenditure, and a host of pamphlets have lately been printed. The latest contribution to the discussion is a brochure by General von Janson on the strategical and tactical co-operation of the Army and the fleet. He says he derived his inspiration a quarter of a century ago from General von Stosch, the first chief of the Admiralty, and his manifest purpose is to interest military men in naval expansion. He shows the necessity of the relationship between the two forces and the nature of their co-operation in various circumstances. Altogether, the present movement in Germany is exceedingly interesting.

The proposals of the French Minister of Marine are now being greatly discussed, and when they are brought before the Chamber a good deal of opposition will, no doubt, be raised. On the whole, they have met with less hostility than might perhaps have been expected. M. de Lanessan appears to have won over to his view some who have hitherto held different opinions. He has shown conclusively that the requisite qualities of armament, protection, speed, and range can only be secured by adopting a large displacement, whence the Superior Council of the Navy has developed the conception of the big battleship and the large armoured cruiser. A writer in the Yacht points out that M. Lockroy's ideal armoured-clad would fail to secure the requisite conditions and could only attain some of them by sacrificing others. It is certainly curious to reflect that shortly after the close of the Peace Conference, which was opened with the dream of a reduction of armaments, we see the continental nations—including Russia herself—embarked upon vast schemes of naval expansion. The French labour under many disadvantages, and they are confronted with the fact that their commercial flag is not seen with the frequency that was the case a few years ago—a fact to which M. Marc Landry draws attention in the Moniteur de la Flotte.

A very singular incident attended with loss of life lately occurred on board torpedo-boat No. 112 at Cherbourg. The facts deserve to be noted. The boiler of the boat had received an internal coat of lime, and in order—according to the Moniteur—to give this the qualities of a kind of enamel, a chafing dish had been lighted from which carbonic acid being disengaged would produce the desired effect. The process should have been allowed forty-eight hours to complete, but a petty officer entered through a man-hole before the carbonic acid had been wholly absorbed. He was immediately asphyxiated without being able to make even a cry. A chief artificer, not knowing what had occurred, followed the unfortunate man and was overcome in the same way, and another artificer who went to his help also became insensible. An alarm was spread and an opening made, and when the three unfortunate men were got out, the first of them was dead and the two others in a state of great danger.

From time to time we have referred to the difficulties that have arisen from the law providing for the amalgamation of the executive and engineer branches in the United States Navy. Considerable dissatisfaction has been expressed recently with the Navy Department's construction of certain details of the law. In consequence of this feeling a delegation of members of the House Committee on naval affairs called upon the Secretary of the Navy and directed his attention to the failure of the department to construe the law as its makers had intended. They referred him to a letter of instruction issued by Rear-Admiral Sampson dealing with the law as applied to officers on board ship, showing that duty in the engine-room was to be performed by all executive officers as well as by former engineer officers. It seems that this has not been the view of the department. Several months ago a general order was issued relieving all commissioned officers from watch duty below deck, and thereby entrusting the important task usually devolving upon engineer officers to warrant officers and men. Secretary Long promised to investigate the matter immediately, and has since announced that the policy of the department, in order to carry out the spirit of the Personnel Bill, is to give former engineer officers, who are hereafter to perform executive duties, relief from engineer duties at sea, in order that they may have every opportunity to prepare themselves to pass the examination required for executive duties. Then, further, a policy pursuing the same end is to provide that at least one officer in every ship who has always been of the executive branch shall be assigned to duty in the engine-room, so that he may get that experience. In other words, former engineer officers, who are hereafter to do executive duty, may learn executive duty, and executive officers may learn to do engineer duty. This letter of the secretary's has created a great deal of comment. It is stated that he has not fully answered questions asked by the committee, for complaint and criticism come from the fact that no commissioned officers are now discharging the duties of the watch officer in engine-room.
